WIFE SAYS DREYFUS BEAT HER

Mrs. Louise D. Dreyfus, asking the Probate Court to order her husband, Edmund Dreyfus, son of the House of Dreyfus, to pay her $20 a week for separate maintenance, told today how blows, kicks, threats and abuse shattered the lifelong honeymoon to which she had fondly looked forward when she eloped with Dreyfus in 1904.

She was then twenty-eight, and was Miss Louise I. Weld of Jamaica Plain. She had won a divorce from a previous husband, with right to resume her maiden name. They eloped to Providence—then flitted to New York, whence after forgiveness by Dreyfus the elder, they returned to New York.

"Mr. Dreyfus has checked me," she told the court, "until I bore black and blue marks on my throat. He has thrown me on the floor. Once he knelt on my body and pounded me. That was when we lived on Hollis street.

"Shortly after he threatened to shoot me—gave me two days to leave the house. I spoke to the police and to my landlady. He chased me three times two days later with a revolver, and I ran into the landlady's arms at the bottom. She ordered us both to move.

"He has struck me fifteen or twenty times. March 22, 1913, I went out to buy a hat. Returning, I entered the apartment when he jumped from behind the door and ordered me to my room. I refused to go and he literally threw me into the street. Since then I have lived with friends.

"In Providence once I saw him going upstairs to the private dining rooms in the Hotel Dreyfus with a woman. I slipped ahead and hid under the table. I heard and saw things I cannot tell. At last I confronted him and the woman and he left the room.

"I have no support except my embroidery. I have failed to find work. He is paid $250 a week by his father for helping at the restaurant here."

In opening arguments, Dreyfus' attorney, George F. James, said he would oppose the petition for separate maintenance by charging Mrs. Dreyfus had been intimate with men beside her husband.

Boston Newsboys Win Court Victory

Shouting of "Uxtrys" Does Not Constitute Breach of Peace.

Boston newsboys won a signal victory before Judge Parmenter in Police Court today, when Hymen Hanay and Charles Waldmann were discharged on the complaint of disturbing the peace.

Tenants of the Journal building and Officer Daniels were the complainants. Manager Abbott of the Journal building, Trustee Loring, James Flynn and Engineer Rich said the boys' shouts disturbed their business.

Attorney Schurton raised the point that shouting "uxtrys" did not constitute a breach of the peace. Judge Parmenter upheld him and the boys were discharged.

Yale Junior Had Hair-Raising trip

Thomas Ash, a Yale Junior, arrived today on the Canadian from Liverpool after a strenuous trip abroad. He shipped as a cattleman, saw the Volturno rescues, said a story of the disaster to a Liverpool paper, was robbed in Paris by apaches, tried to walk to Rouen and was befriended there by a Rouen professor, shipped as a coal passer to Glasgow, and returned on the Canadian with just money enough to take him to New Haven.

Find Rube Waddell Helpless in Street

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 17.—Rube Waddell, one time premier baseball pitcher, was picked up wandering about the streets today exhausted and suffering from consumption. He could not speak above a whisper. Friends took him in charge and provided him with enough money to go to San Antonio, Texas.

"American Readers for American Advertising."

This suggestion is bearing fruit in many fields. For one thing, it is a precious help in home-finding.

American readers who make themselves known as such find dwelling-places that suit them as if made to order by calling on progressive renting agents who advertise Apartments to Let in the Evening and

Sunday Boston American

Some of the readers who made such calls yesterday discovered that particular apartments they had in mind had been spoken for.

But they were not sent away disappointed, for these alert and trustworthy renting agents had other apartments as desirable in every way to discriminating tenants.

Thus do American advertisers exert themselves, with energy and success, to please those whom they know to be American readers.

THAW IN FIGHT FOR MILLION

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 17.—Harry K. Thaw has begun a fight for a million dollars. To win it, he must prove his sanity. And as a first step toward proving himself sane, the fugitive from Matteawan today went into consultation with two celebrated alienists. Upon their opinion of his sanity will depend his future career.

The alienists are H. P. Hickling of Washington and Dr. C. K. Mills of Philadelphia. They arrived, Dr. Hickling Saturday and Dr. Mills Sunday and spent yesterday with Thaw in the "throne room" which Winston Churchill made famous, and which Thaw is using during his stay at the Eagle Hotel here.

H. L. Rice, Thaw stenographer was called in during the consultation to take dictation.

"Spendthrift Fund."

If Thaw can prove his sanity, he will be entitled to the income from $1,000,000 which is at present out of his reach. When his father died, he bequeathed Harry a $1,000,000 "spendthrift fund," not subject to attachment for debt under the Pennsylvania State law. Thaw received from this fund the interest at four per cent, or $40,000 a year.

But when after his trial for murder, he was sent to Matteawan as insane by Justice Dowling's order, the trustees refused to pay him this interest. They could not do so, for Thaw could not write a legal receipt, being insane in the eyes of the law, and the trustees had to have a receipt for their accounting to the courts.

Since that time, Thaw has had no money except from his mother. If he can prove his sanity in Pennsylvania courts, he plans to repay his mother for the money she has advanced him during the seven years of his imprisonment.

While Thaw was in conference with the alienists today, his attorney, Merrill Shurtleff, filed with Clerk Burns P. Hodgman of the United States District Court, an amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The attorneys for Thaw are busy on a new legal brief to support this petition. The first hearing occurs tomorrow at 11 a. m., before Judge Edgar Aldrich here. At that time a date for argument is expected to be set.

Upon these three points, the Thaw counsel will fight the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, if they fail in their plea before Judge Aldrich.

W. T. Jerome, Thaw's Nemesis, was expected here today with Sheriff Fred C. Hornbeck of Dutchess County, ready to take Harry back to Matteawan. Sheriff Hornbeck must serve the extradition warrant on Thaw as a formality, but it will not operate so long as Thaw is in custody of the federal court as he is now.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 17.—The four "boy bandits" who were accused of plotting to rob Orrin Clark of $50,000 he had in his safe, were today sentenced to one year each in jail for carrying concealed weapons.

The four boys are Joseph F. McKinley, nineteen, of Amesbury; Ralph E. and Ray Howard, twenty-two and nineteen respectively, of Haverhill, and Thomas Clark, twenty-two, of Haverhill.

F. B. Sayre Orders His 'Trousseau' Here

Fiance of Jessie Wilson Employs a Boston Tailor.

It appears that you cannot get married in the White House without buying your clothes in Boston. Nicholas Longworth came here for the wardrobe with the aid of which he married Alice Roosevelt; and now Francis Bowers Sayre, who is to wed Miss Jessie Wilson on November 25, has ordered a Boston tailor to prepare his "trousseau."

The tailor is Frank D. Somers of No. 6 Park street. Mr Sayre is a New York attorney. Mr. Somers admitted today that he is doing the work for Mr. Sayre, but added:

"I cannot go into details as to what is included in the order. Mr. Sayre doesn't like notoriety on such matters."

It was learned, however, that besides a dress suit and Tuxedo, there was the afternoon costume in which Mr. Sayre will be married, and a dozen or so of business suits, not to speak of an overcoat or two.

Mayor Says, 'I'll Run Only in Emergency'

Declares Position Is Unchanged in Response to Inquirers.

"Just standing where I have announced myself to stand," said Mayor Fitzgerald at City Hall today in response to inquiries that mounted into almost clamors as to his candidacy again for Mayor.

Tomorrow it is expected that the Election Commissioners will have 15,000 signatures for the Mayor.

"Only a call to what I would consider a public duty, and a critical time, an emergency," said the Mayor, "would impell me to become a candidate again."

Strike Averted on Widener Library

Bricklayers, all of whom belong to the International Bricklayers' Union, resumed work today on the Widener library at Harvard, having decided not to strike. HAMPTON BEACH, N. H., Nov. 17.—The police today buried in Potter's Field the headless body of a woman picked up on the beach a week ago. The police kept the clothing and shoes on the chance that any relative might later appear to identify and claim them.

DECLARES FIGHT IS 'FRAME UP'

Representative William H. McMorrow, and Daniel Mahoney of the Armory A. A. appealed to Governor Foss this afternoon, to send the State Police to the Atlas A. A. tonight and stop the bout between Gunboat Smith and Sam Langford.

McMorrow said he had appealed to Commissioner O'Meara without success. He branded the fight as a "fake" and a "frame-up" and declared it had been forbidden in other States, and had been stopped once in Boston. He said:

"I am acting as a member of the Legislature and as an attorney. Section 12, Chapter 207 of the revised statutes prohibits prize fights or boxing matches for money. Furthermore, I believe this 'fight' to be a fake. Langford is far overweight and out of condition. It is my opinion that it is a frame-up—that Gunboat Smith will be declared the winner and that a return match will be arranged.

"I appealed to Commissioner O'Meara today. He said he had repeatedly prosecuted the clubs and had secured convictions in the lower courts only to meet acquittal in the upper courts. He said there was no way to stop the fight, as the law reads in the past tense, and so no action can be taken till the fight has occurred.

"I believe Mr. O'Meara has the right to stop the fight. But because of his refusal I was forced to appeal to the Governor. He can send the State police and stop it.

"The law forbids taking part in or promoting a boxing match, sparring exhibition or other rattle encounter in which the contestants have been given or promised pecuniary reward. The penalty is a $200 fine or three months or both.

"They tried to stage this 'fake' in California and in another State and were stopped. It was arranged here for four weeks ago, but was stopped then. I believe it will be stopped today."

McMorrow was closeted with the Governor for some time.

THOUSANDS IN TERROR, RUSHING TO BORDER

LAREDO, Tex., Nov. 17.—Thousands of persons are fleeing from the interior of Mexico toward the American border, according to the story told by Louis Mellon, a citizen of the United States, who arrived here today from Tampico, 400 miles away, after covering about half of the distance on foot.

When near Monterey Mellon was held by rebels who searched his clothing thoroughly. Numerous bands of constitutionalists were encountered along the National railway line between Monterey and Saltillo.

"Thousands of persons of all nationalities are making their way toward the border under terrible hardships," said Mellon. "Men, women and children, without food nor shoes and all thinly clad, are making their way the best they can. I saw many demonstrations of bitter anti-American feeling."

TRAINS JAMMED IN EXODUS OF FOREIGNERS FROM MEXICO CITY

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 17.—Fearing massacre in case of outbreak between the United States and Mexico, the exodus of Americans from the capital continued today. Foreigners generally are fleeing to Vera Cruz, the trains to which city are jammed.

Many American citizens who have reached here from interior towns in the interior possess the desperation feeling that the situation has reached a most acute stage, and large numbers of them have joined in the rush to Vera Cruz.

All number of business concerns here whose headquarters are abroad have received cabled instructions to send the women and children of their employes out of the federal capital, while from Vera Cruz today a man arrived, who claimed to be a messenger from John Lind, with what authority was not known, and who urged the immediate departure of all American women and children and advised the men to do likewise.

All the ministers of foreign countries are still here and it is anticipated that any of them will leave their posts, even in case of intervention, as the diplomats consider it part of their duty to safeguard the interests of their respective countries.

Huerta to Fight to the End.

General Huerta still holds it out to the end. Negotiations which aim to oust him from office are at an end. In fact, diplomatic relations have practically been broken off.

This ominous statement was made by an official of the Mexico government today. In explaining that part of his statement as to the breaking off of diplomatic relations he said:

"Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy can appreciate the manner of the Cabinet friend. When Envoy Lind left here, only Minister of the Interior Aldape showed any cordiality to O'Shaughnessy. It was

Freak Fashions at the N. Y. Horse Show

Expert Summarizes Styles for Both Men and Women.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Freak fashions are being shown at the horse show in Madison Square Garden. An expert who visited the show today summarized the styles as follows:

The rig in women's gowns is satin, velvet and chiffon; engine cloaks are bewitching in their magnificence; short gold locks are being worn and algrettes are still in style.

For men, evening clothes are fitted to the waister, not long on blue waistcoats are of silk, just "off white," prevailing style is a V shaped opening; buttons are of pearl and collarette gone extinct.

through Aldape's efforts that negotiations were renewed and now that Aldape has been forced out, it leaves O'Shaughnessy in a peculiar position.

"He is persona non grata to Huerta because he is the official representative of the United States and Senor Modesto, minister of foreign affairs is a creature of Huerta."

O'Shaughnessy's personal property has all been packed up and he is ready to leave for Vera Cruz at a moment's notice. If he does go, and the United States embassy officials expect him to leave within forty-eight hours, it is probable that his departure will be taken without any of finial notice to Huerta.

Aldape's Life in Peril.

Friends of Senor Aldape declared today that he would be lucky if he got out of Mexico without being killed. They charged that an attempt had been made to assassinate Aldape in his private car just as he was leaving for Vera Cruz last night.

A man in civilian clothes who was found to be a colonel in the federal army, was discovered in the car. He was turned over to the police. Probably because he feared for his own life if he spoke otherwise Aldape praised the dictator when he left.

"I am on cordial terms with General Huerta, whom I regard as a patriot and a strong man," said the ex-minister of the interior. "I expect the Senate to affirm my appointment as minister to France within ten days."

Aldape denied that he had been forced out of the cabinet because he had counselled Huerta to resign.

SOUTH AMERICAN NATIONS TO BACK U. S AGAINST HUERTA

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—South American nations have joined the United States in trying to force General Huerta to resign the Presidency of Mexico.

President Wilson told callers today that the situation still was hopeful, despite reports to the contrary. He believes that the cooperation of certain foreign governments, including Brazil and Chili, which never have recognized Huerta, is assured.

The President indicated to his callers that progress is being made in gaining support from both Europe and South America for the anti-Huerta policy. He also indicated that the United States is not planning mediation between the Carranza and the Huerta factions.

Charge O'Shaughnessy of Mexico City has not yet been given his passports by the Mexican government, and has not been ordered to leave Mexico, according to information secured at the White House today.

President Wilson has no intention of directing either O'Shaughnessy or Envoy Lind to leave Mexico at the present time, unless unforeseen developments should compel him to do so.

REBELS EXECUTE JUAREZ PRISONERS BY THE WHOLESALE

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 17.—Sixty-five federal officers and soldiers have been executed by the constitutional troops of General Villa in Ciudad Juarez, since that city was captured Saturday morning, according to refugees who crossed the International bridge into El Paso today.

"Some of the executions have taken place with the consent of Villa," said one man, "but most of them were literally assassinations of helpless victims by brigands who enrolled themselves under the Carranza standard in the hope of big loot. The bodies of all the men shot, even those killed by regular military squads, were robbed."

An outdoor showcase was broken and eight small clocks were taken. They were valued at 29 cents each. The other theft was at Henry L. Conley's, a florist at No. 6 Park street. JUDGE BLAMES STATE IN DEATH OF SCHOOLGIRL

A biting arraignment of the social conditions in Boston, which have resulted in the murder of a little girl, in connection with which two young boys are held awaiting some stern punishment by a Commonwealth which is itself to blame for the murder, is made by Judge Willis Brown, national chairman of the Committee for Advancement of Parental and Educational Courts for Children.

He was the founder and the first judge of the Juvenile and Parental Courts of both Utah and Indiana. He was also the founder of Boy City, the remarkable experiment not far from Gary Indiana.

"I found the two boys buried in Charles street jail," said the judge today. "Their tombs are of stone, with black monuments of iron bars.

"The little girl's tomb will be of earth, decorated with a white marble shaft.

"The Commonwealth murdered all three of these children.

"With the shot fired and finding its mark the Commonwealth turned these two infant wards into men, made them responsible and called them criminals. Another department of state assumed charge and said, 'Now, we prosecute two murderers.'

"I visited the Charles street jail and found that no one other than the two mothers had even inquired about the two children in their cells.

"Two little boys, infants in civil law, infants in school law and infants subject to the wishes and desires of parents; these infants made men criminals by criminal law."

The opinions of Mrs. Pankhurst were given at the meeting held in Faneuil Hall last Saturday evening, at her request. Following is the letter:

No. 96 Pinckney street, Boston.
November 17, 1913.

I greatly appreciate your expressions of opinion as opposed to capital punishment.

With all good wishes for your health and happiness.

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Crothers Tells How Foes Are Made

"Good Advice Given with a Proud Air Rankles," He says.

Rev. Samuel M. Crothers, D. D., pastor of the First Parish Church, Cambridge, said in his address before the Unitarians in Channing Hall today:

"Add a scornful look or word to your alms, and your beneficiary becomes your enemy. Give good advice with a proud air and it will rankle in the heart of one who came seeking a friend. It is only a crude device to add insult to injury, but to add insult to a benefit is to produce a compound that irritates human nature beyond endurance. It is not what you say, but the way that you say it, that makes enemies; not what you do, but the way you do it.

"It is not sufficient to tell the truth, but study the way of telling it." His subject was "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies."

Says Morgan Money Hurt the Church

Rockefeller Also Does More Harm Than Good, Dr. Bradbury Thinks.

The Rev. Dr. Woodman Bradbury of Cambridge told the Baptist ministers at their meeting today in Chipman Hall that J. Pierpont Morgan and John D. Rockefeller in the Baptist church did more harm than good to the churches with their money. Dr. Bradbury was reviewing Churchill's novel, "Inside the Cup" and pointing out some of the objections against the modern church.

"I do not believe some things in this book," he said. "They are clearly overstated. The author says there is much conscious hypocrisy in the churches. I do not believe this at all."

Asks New Hearing of Baseball Case

Ex-Treasurer of Lawrence Team Explains Sale of Player.

Joseph P. Sullivan, former treasurer of the Lawrence Baseball Club, filed a petition today in Suffolk Court asking for a hearing in the case of the Lawrence Club vs. Sullivan. At a hearing before a master a decree was entered against Sullivan on April 23, 1913, and Sullivan was ordered to pay the Lawrence Club $826.56 which the master found Sullivan owed the club.

Now Sullivan claims the master did not understand the importance of an alleged "wash sale" of Carlstrom, a ball player, by the Lawrence Club to the Red Sox. Sullivan says the sale of Player Carlstrom was fictitious; that while the Red Sox sent the Lawrence Club a check for $500 to pay for the player, the Lawrence Club in turn sent its check for the same amount to the Boston club and kept the player.

Curley Coming to Maynard's Dinner

Congressman James M. Curley, as chairman of the Ward 17 Democratic committee, has been invited to Joseph A. Maynard's farewell dinner to the the various ward committee heads next Thursday. Mr. Curley will return from Washington on Thursday to attend, and the question, "Who will be Boston's next Mayor?" is expected to be decided at that meeting.

The other ward chairmen are said to be strongly for Mayor Fitzgerald, and it is expected Curley will be delicately sounded on the question of his support. Meanwhile, Mr. Maynard said today:

"Nothing political in the dinner. I am closing my duties as head of the Democratic City Committee, and simply wish to compliment the ward chairmen."

Assails Fall River Labor Conditions

WHITMAN Nov. 17.—Ninety-one per cent of the men at work in the Fall River cotton mills earn $121 a year less than the amount needed to support the average family, according to statements made by Professor Scott Nearing of the University of Pennsylvania at the Autumn meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs in the town hall here today.

Under such conditions, he asserted, it was idle to boast of prosperity, or to preach ethical standards, while underfed children grow into inefficient adults.

SEEK PEACE IN LAWRENCE MILL STRIKE

LAWRENCE, Nov. 17.—Three hundred and fifty mill stationary firemen went on strike today in the big mills here. This afternoon the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration made attempts to bring the strikers to an agreement with the mill owners.

The places of the strikers were taken by other mill employes. Several hundred workers in the print department of the Pacific mill, in the mule spinning department of the Wood mill and some in the Ayer mill, had quit work today as a result of the strike. These employes, however, will return to work tomorrow.

John J. Cunningham, third vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Firemen, has taken charge with Jeremiah J. Cronin, president of the local A. F. of L. Union. President Cronin said today:

"We will win this fight no matter how long it takes. We are prepared to fight it out to a finish, whether it's a week or a year."

The Arlington Mills, four sub-plants of the Pacific Mills, four mills of the American Woolen Company, and the Pemberton and Everett Mills are effected by the strike. The strikers may succeed in tieing up these mills. If they do succeed, ten thousand employes will be thrown out of work. The men have refused a compromise offer of a sixty-hour week with two days off in seven at the same wage as at present. The mills work twelve-hour shifts. They want an eight-hour day.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The White House was invaded today by a delegation of women suffragists from New Jersey bearing a petition signed by more than 7,000 females, who urged President Wilson to include woman suffrage among the subjects with which he will dent in his annual message to Congress and to use all the power of his office to get an amendment to the federal Constitution which will give the ballots to women.

John Johnson of Berlin, N. H., shipped on the schooner Francis V. Sawyer at Charleston for Hostoli, but had a premonition he would be drowned on the voyage. So he made a makeshift raft and tried to escape to the shore, but was brought back. Forty miles to sea they struck a gale, a wave swept Johnson overboard and he was drowned. The Sawyer reached Boston today.

He could give no explanation for his presence so close to the Executive Mansion and was imprisoned. He will be remanded to the Asylum Hospital for examination of his sanity.

Y., so-called "Up-State Bagman for Tammany," was arraigned before Judge Crain in General Sessions Court today and pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging him with extorting $250 from S. P. MRS. EDYTHE HARRINGTON, Democratic candidate for Brockton school board.

Leads Campaign for Brockton Teachers

Mrs. Harrington Enters Contest on Democratic Ticket.

BROCKTON, Nov. 17.—Mrs. Edythe J. Harrington, who has been nominated by the Democrats for the School Board, says that if she is elected she will do all in her power to find places for local girls as teachers in the schools. She is waging a vigorous campaign and has the backing of hundreds of women voters.

"I have heard so much about Brockton girls being unable to get positions as teachers in our public schools," she said today, "that I have made up my mind that if elected I will do everything in my power to get positions for them here."

"There are only about 1 per cent. of Brockton girls teaching in our local schools and I have known of many cases where local girls have been turned down and have had to go to some little country town to begin."

Six Girls Act as Chum's Pallbearers

Bear Coffin of Mary Joyce, Who Was Shot by Boy.

Six young girls, dressed in white, chums of twelve-year-old Mary Joyce, who was shot and killed in a vacant lot in South Boston by one of two boys who are now held on the charge by the police, were the pall-bearers at her funeral at SS. Peter and Paul Church.

Hundreds who thronged the church or stood outside at the end of the funeral services wondered at the strange sight of children bearing a coffin. Boys and girls from the parochial school of SS. Peter and Paul stood on either side of the main aisle of the church and sang the requiem. A requiem mass will be celebrated today.

Book Suit an Echo of 'De Luxe' Inquiry

An echo of the "de luxe book" investigation in Boston was heard today in the suit of Mrs. Mary L. Rodgers of No. 904 Beacon street against George Barrie & Sons of New York, and the Anglo-American Authors' Association of No. 450. Mrs. Rogers says these firms through agents sold her books bound in a "showy and conspicuous manner," but of little intrinsic value, and says the agents drew purchasers into schemes to buy books and hold them till the books can be delivered to a future purchaser, who is a fictitious personage. She tells of paying $85,000 for books worth, about $3,000.

One Bitter Memory of Childhood Gone

CASTOR OIL IS TASTELESS NOW.

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil is Pure Yet Without Taste or Smell.

Now that castor oil is tasteless, a perfect laxative has arrived.

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil, a new product of the Kellogg Oil Mills, is as absolutely without taste or smell that even the children do not object to it.

Good bye, drugs and pills.

The Kellogg way of making it does not take a single bit of good out of castor oil; rather it purifies the oil and makes it more effective.

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil does even better work than the old-fashioned kind. Sold at all drug stores in 25c and 50c bottles, not in bulk. Ask for it by name or you may be given the old kind, mixed or flavored.

The signature, Kellogg's, is on every bottle, in a green castor leaf trade mark.

Made only by Spencer Kellogg & Sons, Inc., Buffalo, N. Y., oil refiners.

CURRENCY BILL IS ASSAILED BY THE GRANGERS

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 17.—"It's about time the Grange took a hand in the currency bill pending in Washington and throw the weight of its influence against a few stubborn Senators and a few bankers who are trying to hold up the country," said Master William T. Creasy of the Pennsylvania State Grange to the AMERICAN today. Mr. Creasy served sixteen years in the Pennsylvania State Legislature. He is one of the heaviest men intellectually in the progressive grange movement. They call him "Honest Farmer Creasy" in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Creasy submitted his report as State master to the National Grange today. His report is important, for it outlines definitely the co-operation and the farmers' interest in the currency bill. His recommendations will comprise the policy of the Progressive element of the Grange.

His policy, which the Grange will try to have inserted in the general currency bill, recommends that national banks be allowed to loan on farm mortgages if the government sees fit to change the mortgages so that liquid assets. Mr. Creasy's plan is to issue interest bearing coupon bonds on the mortgages at a rate of interest which would furnish a small profit to the farmer.

"The only way this question will ever be settled," said Mr. Creasy, "is to put it in the hands of the government. We have been too long allowing bankers to borrow money from the government at 2 per cent. and loans it to the farmers at 8 per cent."

New Evidence to Vindicate Beilis

It is reported that some important acquittal of Beilis from evidence has been discovered and that Beilis will be completely vindicated.

GIRL KILLED BABY TO SPARE HIM DISGRACE

Jail Attendants Are Moved to Tears by Theresa Bernard's Story.

A most piteous and affecting human document has come to the AMERICAN. It is a mother's story of why she killed her child.

The mother was Theresa Bernard. The father of the child is nameless. The mother is in the Charles Street Jail, indicted for first degree murder.

She does not deny her crime. She does not appeal for sympathy. Yet not even the hardened jail officials have been able to talk with her or to hear her story without a pang at their hearts. When the jail physician left her, after his first visit to her cell, tears were batsing his cheeks.

She is not yet twenty-five years old, yet the pendulum of her life has swung from the heights of happiness and hope through the darkest depths of tragic despair. No mother who has felt the warmth of a child in her arms needs to be told what this girl endured before she dropped her baby boy to death in the harbor.

Theresa Bernard, who admits she dropped her little one to death in the waters of the harbor to spare him, she says, the jeers and jibes he would face as a fatherless boy in after life.

The story has been told before, through other lips. But the mother's own story did not become public till Mrs. Florence Brennan, the girl's best friend, revealed it. Mrs. Brennan says Theresa Bernard twice a week in the Charles street cell. She is trying to mitigate the terrible situation of the young mother. And this story, just as the girl told it to Mrs. Brennan, is repented here.

Sought Fortune in Violin.

"I was born in Ireland," the girl told Mrs. Brennan. "My home was beautiful. My father and mother were the best on earth. I was happy.

"I loved music, and before I was fifteen my mother let me try to play a violin. I did well enough, so that she persuaded father to let me take lessons.

"When I was twenty I became discontented at home. My brother had come to America and succeeded. I was allowed to follow him. I came here, and lived with him for a while, while I tried to find a chance to earn money with my violin. It was slow, hard work.

"While I hunted musical work, I had to find something else to do. This search led me to a department store. I got a place there during the Christmas rush, December 27, 1910. Here let me go.

"That day I saw an advertisement of a theatrical booking agency on Tremont street. I went there and found G—— in charge.

"He asked me what experience I had. 'I can play the violin,' I told him. 'And I must do something. I'm living with my brother, but if I can earn some money to pay room rent I will not be a burden on him.'

"I know now that he must have put the worst construction on my words. At the time he only said:

"'I can put you on at an amateur night at a moving picture show out in Dorchester. If you're good enough, you can win a $5 prize.'

Things Seemed Brighter.

"That money looked like a very great deal to me. I went, played a violin solo, and won the prize. The next day I moved to a furnished room on Union Park street. Everything looked pretty bright to me.

"A week later G—— said he had a night's engagement for me in a Rhode Island city. He went down with me. There he was suddenly taken sick. I had almost to carry him from the train to the car in Boston, and I helped him to his flat, which was also his office. There he collapsed.

"You must remember that I owed everything to him. He was sick and helpless. I nursed him through his illness, and the doctor said I did well. I stayed there for eight days—snatching sleep on the couch in his office, while he lay on his bed in the next room. When he was able to care for himself I went back to my room. He was sicky for two months, and I helped him with his office work till March. He paid me, but I had to work terribly hard.

"I found that he had many girls for whom he got theatrical engagements. They seemed to be giving him money all the time. But there was no cloud on my life then, and I was happiest when I worked hardest. For I was earning my own living—succeeding.

"In March he said to me one day:

"'Why don't you get a room nearer the office here? It's a long walk for you.'

"We talked it over. I agreed. He said: 'I'll attend to moving your things.' He had me send the trunk to the North Station, and he sent there and got it, so the people at my old lodging did not know where I went. I met him at the North Station, and he said we would stop at his office before going to my new room. We stopped there.

"In June I began to feel queerly. I was sick. 'You'd better go to the Belnet street dispensary and let them look you over,' he said.

"I went into the dispensary with no worry, nothing but happiness in the present and the future I expected. The doctor looked at me—examined me—asked me a question in a tone that frightened me.

"I went back to G. He listened to my story.

"'You'd better go to New York, to X—— (a relative). Say nothing. They can't put you out,' he said.

"I shuddered, and for the first time I seemed to realize what was ahead of me.

"'No,' I told him. 'Then you must do some work,' he cried. He made me do as he said during the month that followed. I was like the other girls I had seen in his office—till I sickened. There were more trips to cheap little theatres. At last the baby came. I went to the social service workers then. I met people who helped me. They found me places to live.

Treated as a Daughter.

"There was one fine old Irish woman who treated me as a daughter instead of a servant. She had come from a town ten miles from my home. We were talking one day of home. 'I remember,' she said, 'when I was a little girl, a woman brought her baby to see us one day. There were some other neighbors there. They wouldn't touch the little thing—eyed it queerly. It had no father.'

"My baby was on my knees at the time. I looked down at him, and wanted to stoop and crush him in my arms. He was a year old then—I loved him. I was a mother, and knew what only mothers do know. She had not thought how her story of the fatherless child at home would touch me—would touch my fatherless baby on my knees. I remembered her word.

"A few months later, they decided I wasn't well in this country—that I had best go home to Ireland—that I could take my baby and we could start over again in the Old Country. My heart jumped and sang for a moment, then I remembered that little story of the fatherless baby. I fancied myself at home, the baby in my arms or clinging to my hand, while curious stares followed us. I could not take it home.

"It was then that the thought first came to me—'What is life to him? What does it hold? Branded with my misery and shame.' If I took him home he would grow up a target for jeers and taunts.

"My brain whirled round and round that thought. I could not take him home to mother and father. The time drew near. We were to sail Tuesday, October 7.

"Saturday night, my baby in my arms, I walked the streets, crossed the bridge to South Boston, looked down at the water, but could not let him go. Sunday night it was the same. Monday I tried again.

"I took the baby and wrapped him in my shawl. I walked down to the South Boston piers. We met a policeman. He passed me a word. 'Better go home. Pretty cold,' he said. I nodded and slipped back, and when he had moved on I returned. I went to the end of the pier.

"The baby was heavy in my arms. He was asleep. I kissed the top of his head and held him close to my breast so that the warmth of his little body pressed just above my heart. I reached the edge of the bridge, or the end of the pier, I'm not sure which. It was dark, and I was thinking only of the baby. I kept thinking: 'Oh, how he would hate the jeers when he grew up. He couldn't bear them!'

"There was a railing. I set the baby on it. He was oh so very sleepy—little eyes pressed tight shut. I shook him a little. His head fell back, and the laugh vanished from his eyes. His fingers held on my sleeve for a minute. I shook my hand free. He dropped out of sight. I heard the splash of the water as though it had come up, with a joyous shout, to receive him. I heard a little bubbling cry, and then I turned and walked away. He was safe. And as for myself—nothing mattered."

The plan was beaten by a vote of 1,443 to 957. More than half of the total votes were cast by women.

JESSIE WILSON BEGINS LIFE'S BUSIEST WEEK

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—With her wedding to Francis B. Sayre of New York set for next Tuesday, Miss Jessie Wilson, daughter of the President, today began the busiest and most romantic week of her life.

Throughout the remaining days she will undergo the delightful thrill of opening wedding gifts and of being the guest of honor at numerous social affairs planned in her favor.

The big event of this week, awaited with intense anxiety, will be the arrival of the wedding gown from New York.

Among the notable entertainments for Miss Wilson this week is one by Miss Nona Meakin, daughter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and a buffet luncheon by Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of the Speaker, and the person who selected Miss Wilson's bridal gift for Congress.

Mr. Sayre just after he received from the office of District Attorney Whitman in New York said today:

"A young man who contemplates matrimony should realize that he is taking the most important and consequential step of his life. I do not believe in too prevalent laws for obtaining divorce. I think they should be stricter. As things are now we find one law for the rich and another for the poor."

Says Law Is Issue in New Haven Case

Attorney Matthews Appears for Bulkeley at Bond Hearing.

Associate Counsel Matthews, representing the Morgan G. Bulkeley interests at the New Haven bond hearing at the Federal Building, declared today that the questions of public law involved are by far the most important phases of the litigation, and the whole policy of Massachusetts under her statutes relating to the stock inflation and undue expansion of railroad debt, since 1893, was at stake.

He also declared that under sections 16 and 27 of the Public Service Commission act, the Legislature clearly indicated its intention to give anybody the right of reasonable appeal.

PLACE FOR MORE CANDIDATES AS TYPICAL GIRL

Where does she live? How does she look? What is her ancestry?

Such are the questions girls are asking each other, and what young men who has gallantly sent in the pictures of sisters and others, are inquiring of those they meet.

The Typical Girl refuses to arrive at the AMERICAN office with such a label attached to her so as to dispel all doubts of her undisputed right to the title.

There are scores of girls whose friends have been confident enough to send in pictures. These friends write frankly of the characteristics and features of the young woman. To such photograph should be pasted the accompanying letter as an aid to the judges.

As photographs are not tinted, the color of eyes, hair and complexion will undoubtedly count less than figure, features, poise and expression. "Tell me and air about the American girl that cannot be mistaken," say the artists, and upon that will go many points.

Send in your photographs; there is yet space left on the editor's desk for more contestants.

The prize, which will be presented as the "Typical American Girl" when she is selected by the judges in this great contest, will be a life-sized oil portrait of herself, painted by a noted New England artist, from personal sittings.

Inquiry May Cut Prices of Coal

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 17.—A general reduction of freight rates in the anthracite field, and a curtailment of coal prices is expected to result from an investigation begun here today by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The investigation, which is being carried on by Commissioner Marble, is to be one of the most far-reaching ever held with reference to the coal industry and will probe the "rates, practices and regulations governing transportation of hard coal."

Mrs. Mead Urges Ministers to Help

Mrs. Edwin D. Mead of the American Peace Society urged upon the Methodist Episcopal ministers at their meeting today in the chapel of the Old South Church, the necessity of using their influence to get the United States government to take the lead in calling the Third Hague conference. "We must have nations organized to prevent war," she said.

Hold Woman Who Figured in Blaze

Mrs. Sadie Howland of No. 524 Sumner street, East Boston, was in the Roxbury court today on a charge of drunkenness. Mrs. Howland was in or near the bungalow of Harry J. Dean on Bridge street, Dedham, when it caught fire yesterday, and Dean was burned so badly that his life is in danger. At the request of the Dedham police, Mrs. Howland's case was continued till Friday and she was held in $200 while the fire is investigated.

U. S. to Sweden Line Asks for a Charter

$100 REWARD FOR MISSING SCHOOL HEAD

FALMOUTH, Nov. 17.—The Selectmen today offered $100 reward to anyone locating John H. Swain, superintendent of schools, who has been missing since Saturday and is believed lost or injured in the woods beyond Ashumet.

A clew was discovered today.

Aubrey Benson, nineteen, of West Barnstable, was driving along the road on his way home Saturday afternoon, when he was accosted by a stranger and asked for a lift. He took in the man, who explained that he had left his automobile by the side of the road, coming from Pocasset, and wandered into the woods and had lost his way.

He asked if there was any good place nearby where he could spend the night. The man is described by Benson as being about forty years old, of light complexion, wearing dark clothes and a cap, and with rather stooping shoulders.

Charles F. Burgess, chairman of the school committee, says that this description answers that of Mr. Swain.

DIZZY, HEADACHY, SICK, "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months.

MRS. TROOP SCORES WAKEFIELD HANGING

Mrs. Alexander Troop, Sr., of New Haven, has written for the AMERICAN a vigorous protest against capital punishment in general and the execution of Mrs. Bessie J. Wakefield of Middlebury, Ct., in particular.

Mrs. Troop is one of the leaders in the New England vote fight to save Mrs. Wakefield from being hanged.

A stirring sentence from her protest reads:

"It is horrible and revolting in the extreme that one woman—Mrs. Wakefield—and two men—Plew and Bergeron—are to be hanged on March 4, 1914, for the murder of Mrs. Wakefield's husband."

Mrs. Troop concludes with a stirring call for united action toward abolition of the death penalty. Her protest reads in full:

By MRS. ALEXANDER TROUP, SR.

As agitation usually results in better laws, the opponents of capital punishment should now realize that the opportunity is again presented to them to abolish the barbarous and inhuman death penalty. This punishment has never been a deterrent to crime. Nor is it true that the brief pain of execution works reform. It is not true that crimes and executions are like the waves of the sea, they follow each other in such rapid succession, despite the death penalty. The purpose of punishment should be to reform, the effect should be to prevent or at least to lessen crimes. Have these results come from the capital punishment inflicted in the past? Most assuredly not.

Hanging for Debt.

The wrongful "Bessie" Wakefield murder case is absorbing the attention of the entire country. It is horrible and revolting in the extreme that one woman, Mrs. Wakefield, and two men, Plew and Bergeron, are to be hanged on March 4, 1914, for the murder of Mrs. Wakefield's husband. This protest does not imply that such a crime should go unpunished. A life sentence should be substituted for all criminals alike, and there should be no power of pardon vested in any individual or commission.

At one time even deot was punished by the death penalty. If that custom prevailed at present, many very prominent in every community would be dangling where they could study aerial navigation at close range. No doubt this method of punishment now would increase the interest in the abolishment of the death penalty.

The inconsistency of capital punishment is quite alarming. The criminal is condemned to death by law. We ask: Has the State the right to take a life which it cannot restore? Life was given by God for His own purpose, of which men have no means of definitely knowing. Therefore, no one has the right to thwart His purpose by taking life prematurely. Self-defence may sometimes be a sufficient justification for taking life, but apart to this present case.

Again, the person who takes a life is tried, found guilty and hanged, by law, but how about the person who executes the sentence; is he guiltless of taking life?

There is no attempt to justify the three criminals in the Wakefield case; they were as heartless as they were cruel. This murder was the result of passion, and of the depraved relations existing among the trio. There is no justification whatever for this crime, which has brought unmerited disgrace upon one son of Plew, and two children of Mrs. Wakefield, whom they are now using as a shield to protect them from the execution of the law, quite oblivious to the fact that, if these parents had done their duty by their innocent children, clemency would not now be sought to save the murderers.

These facts, horrible as they are, do not lessen the grewsomeness of capital punishment. It is said that Plew is a degenerate. If such is the case, is he and are others like him fully accountable? Is it just to inflict a death penalty on the irresponsible? If the normal in mind are willful murderers, of what benefit is the brief pain of execution? It certainly cannot reform them. It is not true that executions prevent crime. The purpose of punishment should be to reform, and to point out the regrettable and dangerous conditions which breed such types of human beings as Mrs. Wakefield, Plew and Bergeron.

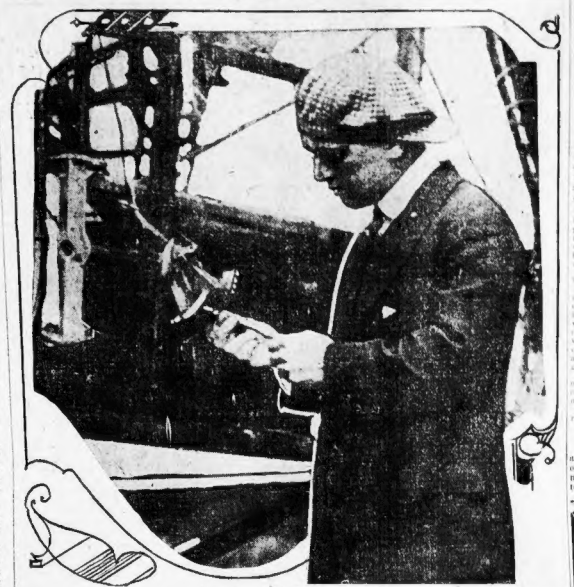
Should Awaken Women.

The symptoms of this hysteria, which Mrs. Wakefield's case has awakened, especially among women, should not be allowed to submerge them in sensationalism. This case should awaken them to a realization of a vital issue, which society must not longer neglect. Legal murder, dangling will not do it. Besides, there is a growing antipathy to capital punishment. Crimes such as the Wakefield murder are not by human nature worthy to be capital for foreigners. Rural districts and the native born have their quota of criminals which are the result of conditions there.

Regarding Mrs. Wakefield, there are many extenuating circumstances. She was a victim of environment; of ignorance and of cruelty. Her life indeed was a dismal one. This is not attempt to condone her crime because of sex. Sentiment must not be allowed to overshadow justice, especially because of the precedent it would furnish others, who are morally weak. Of course the fact remains that woman are tried and hanged by laws in which they have had no voice in the making, therefore woman should have the ballot, as a protection and as an act of justice. Until they have it, it is not fair to judge them by laws which they deem unjust.

The attorneys in the Wakefield case said: "Plew is the weak-minded tool, and Bessie Wakefield the strong-minded woman." Certainly this is another argument against capital punishment and really Plew should not be hanged just because he is a man. The sentimentalists are upsetting because Mrs. Wakefield's children will be left motherless, but not one protest is heard because Plew's child will be left fatherless. If the verdict was a life sentence for these slayers, and no one doubts that such is merited and would be given, that would settle the question. Let there be a united action by both men and women for the abolition of capital punishment.

AVIATOR "JACK" M'GEE inspecting mechanism of the machine in which he will race train from Boston to New York next Saturday.



WAGER M'GEE BEATS TRAIN IN HIS AIR CRAFT

Odds of three to two on the bird may were quoted today in sporting discussion of the great race which is to be held next Saturday from Boston to New York between a flying machine and the Bay State Limited.

"Jack" McGee of Pawtucket, R. I., one of the younger but one of the most daring aviators, is to pit his Burgess-Wright biplane against the New Haven flyer for a 233-mile run between terminals.

McGee says tersely:

"I will beat the Limited—or 'bust.'

"But I won't 'bust.'

"I don't say just what flying time I shall make from Boston to New York, but I shall beat the train, if it's only by a minute. I shall fly over the Grand Central Depot in New York City before the Limited pulls into the train shed."

The start will be from Boston at 10 o'clock next Saturday morning. The train is due to arrive in New York at 3:10 p. m. McGee will be there ahead of it, he declares.

McGee will start from Franklin Field, where he will have the room he needs for a getaway. He will fly across to the South Station and hover in the air until the Limited starts. Then McGee will dart after the Limited and the race will be on.

A signal gun will be fired when the Limited starts, so the watching public may know just when the race begins.

A splendid view will be obtained, of course, of McGee, and also of the train if one is at any point along the track.

The route of the train is along the famous Shore Line to Providence, thence to New London, New Haven and New York.

The flying machine will take the Shore Line route, of course. This means that McGee's schedule will call for his passing over the following places between Boston and Providence: Back Bay Station, Hyde Park, Readville, Green Lodge, Canton Junction, Sharon, Sharon Heights, East Foxboro, Mansfield, Attleboro, Dodgeville, Helmsville, Pleasant View, Central Falls, Pawtucket, Providence.

All along the way the residents of these places will see an thrilling a race as ever was held—the first time that an aviator in America has been matched against a train.

Westward of Providence tens of thousands more people will see the mighty contest between the two, flyer speeding overhead and the steam flyer thundering along the rails.

Aviator McGee Says He Will Win Race

"I will beat the Limited—or 'bust.' But I won't 'bust.' I don't say just what flying time I shall make from Boston to New York, but I shall beat the train."

CHURCHES BIG OFFENDERS IN LOTTERY GAME

—J. Frank Chase

J. Frank Chase of the Watch and Ward Society told a church audience in Worcester that church fairs are almost the worst offenders against the gambling laws. He was addressing an audience at the Adams Square Congregational Church in Worcester and said:

"When it comes right down to gambling, churches are about the worst offenders we have. When I entered here tonight, I looked around to see if there were any posters announcing some affair in which the lottery was mentioned. I am glad to say I found none.

"I am often asked why I don't fight the church lottery or gambling.

"I have never told people who ask such questions what I have done, but I might have told them of many private letters which I have dropped to pastors, warning them that if they should run the games of chance in their churches which they had planned I should proceed against them as I would against any person or organization promoting a gambling scheme.

"In one church with which I was connected I was almost fired out of it, because I opposed a lottery, and stuck to it in the face.

"The churches need educating to this respect as much as others."

WIDOW GLAD TRACY SUICIDE IS EXPLAINED

"I am glad the story of my husband's death is out, and the world now knows how and why he met his end," today declared Mrs. Frank Basil Tracy, widow of the editor in chief of the Boston Transcript, in commenting on the exclusive publication in the Sunday AMERICAN of his suicide last Thanksgiving night from a Sound line steamer, following his escape from an asylum.

Early last Sunday AMERICAN scoops appeared not one word about Mr. Tracy's passing had appeared in any Boston newspaper. Just why the facts were so carefully suppressed has not been explained.

Needless to say the story of Mr. Tracy's end was not known to the Boston AMERICAN until a few hours ago.

"Now the truth has been kept a secret, why it has been suppressed, and the facts surrounding it I do not know," Mrs. Tracy said today. "I have been desirous of having it made known to the world, for the agony I endured in answering queries about my husband was almost unbearable.

"Last Thanksgiving night he left the Butler Hospital in Providence, where he had been under treatment for insanity, boarded the New York bound steamship Tennessee in Providence, and after setting letters of farewell to myself and his brother, jumped overboard."

Says Mrs. Knapp in Recommending Father John's Medicine

Mrs. Margaret Knapp, of Detroit, Mich., says: "Three years ago I had a severe attack of bronchitis. My doctor ordered me to bed for four weeks. A friend advised me to try Father John's Medicine, which I did, and after using it I was entirely relieved. My son Elmer, whose picture you find with me, has been having a standing cold since November. I daily pursuded him to take Father John's. He is rid of his cold, and his cough has almost entirely left him. His appetite has increased nicely since taking Father John's Medicine. Thousands of women, as well as men, take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets now and then just to keep in the pink of condition.

PATRICK LENOX, LYNN LEATHER MAN, IS DEAD

Patrick Lenox, leather manufacturer of Lynn, died at his home No 182 Washington street, today, aged eighty-eight years.

Since the big Lenox failure in 1907, when he dropped a million dollars in a business venture, he had been failing in health. His company went into bankruptcy. The receiver, however, paid up all the bills.

Mr. Lenox came to this country from Ireland at the age of twenty. When he was here ten years he started in business for himself. In a few years he rose to the head of the largest leather manufacturing plant in the city.

LOVE STORY OF EVELYN AND HARRY THAW

CHAPTER LXXIII.

"Set with the sharp mordant of experience"—Stephen Lincoln.

Roland B. Molineux, who had had long and arduous experience with to defendants and of a murder charge, was greatly interested in Thaw's situation. Speaking of the coming trial, Molineux said:

While it is perfectly true that "All the world loves a lover," there is still a deeper reason for the profound interest in the Thaw trial. It is because every person loves a combat.

In the Supreme Court a fight is on for the biggest stake of all—human life.

The district attorney will prosecute one side. Lawyers retained at high fees by the Thaw side will fight for the defense. But lawyers do not make all of the defence—Love will be part of it.

Then Molineux made apt prophecy of the widespread interest that the trial would create. He said that it would be the talk of the city, of the country—almost of the world. He declared that women would neglect their houses and men their work and nurses the babies, in order to get all the news of the trial.

Molineux also commented on the strain put upon the newspapers to cover the case in full, to get the best, most accurate and at the same time most colorful picturesque descriptions of the court scenes, outside of the details of testimony.

Molineux a Prophet.

Molineux was a clever prophet, as developments showed. All he said about the extravagant interest in the trial was outdone by the actual facts when the trial came. There was to be no trial of recent years in which the public displayed such an absorbed, almost frenzied, interest.

* * *

The Sunday preceding the trial was an opportunity for sadly needed rest for all concerned.

Harry passed the day quietly in his cell. He was eager for the crisis. He was thoroughly confident of being acquitted, much more so than his counsel was. The lawyers, unswayed by any such personal feelings as Harry entertained, never figured for a moment but what they had a stiff fight ahead of them, when they came face to face with Jerome and the unemotional readings of the law.

Evelyn remained at the Lorraine Sunday, talking over the coming event with Harry's mother, sister and other members of the Thaw family. Forebodings gripped the family. But none of them had the prospect immediately awaiting that Evelyn did—that of being examined and cross-examined until she stood before the world, her very soul stripped of all its secrets.

In Evelyn's "Story of My Own Life," now current in the Sunday AMERICAN, the girl writes, in reference to that preparation for the trial:

I am to tell the story of Stanford White. It gives me a nasty taste to think of it; it filled me with horror when I first understood that I had to do it. It is an unthinkable thing that I must stand up in open court and tell——. But there is no way out—nothing else will serve, and Harry's life is in the balance. After all, what does it matter? I tell myself this a hundred times a day.

Other women have gone into court and told stories without so much as turning a hair, which were infinitely more discreditable to themselves, but I feel my youth, and the future looms up very black. Nobody doubts that I will hesitate to lay bare my soul.

Evelyn Faces Jerome.

Evelyn wondered what Jerome would do to her in cross-examination. Her feelings of anticipation she described then in "My Own Story":

Nor does the news that he (Jerome) intends to tear me limb from limb and to display the intestines remains triumphantly inspire me with anything but amusement. I do not despise the terrors of cross-examination.

Small wonder that people wish to avoid the witness chair as a priest the devil. The "Third Degree" examination is increased tea-fold by the fear of publicity. No matters not who or what you are, there always remains a chance that you may be dragged into some case.

Now I want to say something for which I shall most likely be severely criticised, but I think it necessary. It is right and proper that you should have great respect for the law, the courts and its impressive ceremonies, even the court officers and clerks—but don't take them too seriously.

Most witnesses are overawed by the solemnity of the hour and the proceedings, seeming to lose their wits and lapse into a state of mental numbness pitiful to behold.

However, as I said before, don't take them too seriously. After all, the judge himself is only a man and probably not half so learned and solemn as he looks, and for all you know may have got his job through some political juggling. As for the lawyers—they may be leading double lives themselves.

Evelyn was no longer an unsophisticated, believing child of a sheltered life. She had become a sceptical, disillusioned woman of the world. By the time the first trial of Harry Thaw began the girl had acquired a keen, satirical, almost merciless view of life, having been so buffeted by fate in her twenty-two years. Subsequent events were not to render her any more trusting, either.

Harry's Wife Was Unafraid.

Evelyn did not doubt for a moment but what Jerome would do his legal best to rout her, to hold her up to shame and ridicule, to break down her story and destroy her self-possession.

But the girl was unafraid of the result. She felt that she could match her wits with those of the famous prosecutor. She had nerved herself for a harrowing ordeal and was ready to play her part. The girl was "game," as the sporting fraternity expresses it.

Jerome was only too ready for the trial. He had prepared himself better than any one—even his own prosecuting associates—suspected. He had burrowed into books on insanity. He had looked up one authority after another. He was prepared to meet any form of insanity that the defence might offer.

It will be recalled that, in an early chapter of this narrative, mention was made of Jerome's faculty of concentration. An incident of his life at Williston Seminary in 1877 was related. He was reproved by his chemistry professor for "cutting" lectures. The youth defied the professor to "stick" him on any point in the book, and the professor found that young Jerome had the book by heart. Jerome had absorbed the course merely by outside reading. He had a marvelous faculty of absorbing a technical subject as a sponge takes up water.

This same facility of acquirement was standing Jerome in good stead in getting ready to try Thaw. Jerome knew that he would have to examine and cross-examine expert alienists. He had been through this before. He was preparing to meet Brother Alienist on his own ground and to make matters exceedingly interesting for the latter if occasion arose.

* * * *

Many a New Yorker, male and female, went to bed that Sunday night resolved to be up a bit early, so as to allow time to get to the Criminal Court building and mix into the general rush for a chance to see Thaw in court.

COLLINS SAYS JUDGE FALLON INSULTED HIM

Edward D. Collins of the Governor's Council appeared before Judge Fallon in the South Boston Court today to defend two men accused of robbing a negro of his watch. He left the court declaring that he had been insulted by the judge, and that he would get justice elsewhere. It was all because William Frisbee, the negro who said he was robbed, had no patience with Mr. Collins' cross-examination.

Mr. Collins' clients were Augustus Cahill and George McDermott. After Frisbee had told his story of the robbery, which he said was a hold up, on Southampton street, Mr. Collins cross-examined him:

Collins—How wide is the street.

Frisbee—Oh, I don't know and I don't care. It's not my business to measure streets when I get my watch stolen. If you want to know how wide it is, go measure it yourself.

Collins—Your Honor, I appeal to you. This man is not giving proper answers.

Judge Fallon—I think his answers are perfectly proper.

Collins—Your Honor, I won't go on with this case if I am to be insulted by the witness and also by the court. If I don't get justice here, I'll get it somewhere else.

Judge Fallon—I have not insulted you, sir. You may proceed, or I shall hold these men in $500 for the Grand Jury.

Collins refused to proceed, the men were held, and Frisbee departed, smiling.

EBBETS BOOMS SON TO HEAD NEWARK CLUB

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—George L. Solomon, president of the Newark Baseball Club, may not be re-elected at the annual meeting of the Canadian International League club in Newark today. There have been persistent reports that Charles H. Ebbets, Jr., will be chosen to head the club.

The Newark fans blame Ebbets for the slump of the club that followed his transfer last August of Pitcher Aitchison, Outfielder Collins and Catcher McCarty to the Brooklyn National League team.

The selection of the Spring training grounds for the Indians will probably be made today, and it is reported that Manager Harry Smith will be compelled to pick new grounds, though he would prefer to again take his squad to Savannah. His men were idle only one day because of rain while at Savannah last Spring; but it is said that Ebbets intends to use that city as the place to condition his Brooklyn athletes.

Cornell Hopeful of Holding Penn Safe

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 17.—The Cornell football coaches today cleared the decks for vigorous practice for the annual battle with Pennsylvania on Thanksgiving Day, which is regarded as the last important game on the local schedule.

The victory over Lafayette and the possibilities shown by the reorganized team have put heart into the followers of the Red eleven. The coaches have only ten days to whip into a well-rounded team eleven players, most of whom are playing positions different from those they filled for the major part of the season.

Shelton and Fritz, the backs who were shifted to ends, have made good. The work of Ilma was satisfactory, and the brunt of the practice from now on will be toward team development and team play.

Peter Bruno Goes on the Warpath

Peter Bruno, the North End middleweight, is seeking matches. Bruno has won his last two fights, defeating Bob Brennan of Charlestown on a foul twice.

Michigan Halfback Foils Penn Players with 'Injured' Knee

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 17.—Brute Pontius, right tackle for Michigan, used his head as well as his nerve in playing against Pennsylvania Saturday. His injured knee made it doubtful if he could stay through the entire battle. Pontius soon discovered that the Quakers were aware of his weakness by the regularity with which they sprawled over his legs. In the second half Pontius limped on to the field with a fresh white bandage. Time after time, some one fell on the knee. Pontius just smiled, and proceeded to get his man in the next formation. He had put the visible bandage on the wrong knee.

HARVARD PLANS WAR AGAINST SPECULATORS

Ticket speculation will receive a "black eye" at the Harvard-Yale football game in the Stadium next Saturday. At least this is the belief of Frederick W. Moore, graduate treasurer of the Harvard A. A., who has charge of the distribution of 27,000 of the 44,000 tickets at Cambridge today. This year's ticket will bear the owner's name in big black indelible letters, and it will be for his use only. By this system, Mr. Moore hopes to ward off any chance of speculation. Both graduates' and undergraduates' tickets will bear the personal stamp. If anyone other than the owner attempts to use the ticket the ticket will be destroyed and the person whose name is on it will be placed on the blacklist forever. The ticket distribution at Harvard began at 9 o'clock this morning.

HARVARD-YALE GAME AT THE STADIUM SATURDAY IS GOING TO BE A BATTLE TO THE FINISH

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

SAM LANGFORD IS 2 TO 1 FAVORITE IN NEAR-TITLE BOUT WITH "GUNBOAT" SMITH TONIGHT

POSSIBLE SHIFTS IN YALE LINEUP ARE DISCUSSED

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Nov. 17.—Several changes in the Yale lineup at the game in the Harvard Stadium next Saturday, some of which will probably have to be made through injuries to the regulars and others which may be made to strengthen the team, were discussed by the Yale coaches today.

The substitution of Guernsey for Knowles at right half back and the possibility of Avery, Pendleton and Carter being unable to play through physical condition are factors that must be taken into account.

The Eli warriors who played against the Tigers Saturday arrived here this morning from Fatefield, Ct., where they spent Sunday at the Summer place of Oliver Jennings.

Light Practice Today.

Only light practice was planned for today. A short signal drill will be included in the workout. This will be the first preparation for the Harvard game.

The harder work will begin tomorrow. A long dummy scrimmage, in which the scrubs will use the Harvard formations against the 'varsity, will be part of the workout. Wednesday's program will be practically the same as tomorrow.

Chamberlin Drilling Defence.

Burr Chamberlin, a former captain at Yale, will look to the defensive work of the team this week.

Most Yale men think that Saturday's showing will send Yale to Harvard fully on even terms with the Crimson. The coaches think that the Harvard rush line, from tackle to tackle, is not strong and, in case Guernsey is started, will be subjected to the fiercest hammering it has stood up against this season. Guernsey and Dunn being alternated in centre drives if the Crimson 30-yard line is reached.

The question of the captaincy has been agitated recently because the result of the choice. No clearly logical candidate exists. The largest squad of leaders in years is enrolled on the present team, including Dunn, Avery, Talbott, Marting, Pendleton, Warren and Cooney. Players who will be seniors next year include Carter, Knowles and Pumpelly. Should Pumpelly be called into the Harvard game Saturday and, by a repetition of his phenomenal goal at Princeton last year, either tie or win the match, he would almost certainly be the choice.

Only Three Veterans Lost to Princeton

PRINCETON, N. J. Nov. 17.—Princeton is gradually recovering from the gloom attending the tie game of Saturday and is looking forward to next year's prospects. The fact that the Tiger cubs defeated the Yale freshmen by the score of 30 to 0, means much to Princeton, and the Tigers are counting on benefitting by some excellent material from the 1917 eleven.

Next Fall Princeton loses Captain Baker and Phillips by graduation, and Streit, on account of the three-year rule. All the other members of the team will be able to play, however. They include S. Baker, Law, F. Trenkham, E. Trenkham, Hammond—the latter two being looked upon as the probable candidates for the captaincy—Brown, Glick, Semmeaus, W. Swart and L. Swart, Bullis, Shea, Lamberton and Borden.

From the freshman team, Briggs, Ehrgstadt, Rogers, Dickerman and Charles will most likely prove valuable recruits. Three men who were ineligible this year will be available next Fall—Beloud, Kirby and Bolton.

Harvard Must Fight to Win from Old Eli

Strong "Come Back" of Yale Against the Tigers Points to a Hard Battle at Stadium Saturday.

By SYDE LYNES.

THE football season of 1913 for all intents and purposes enters the home stretch today and all eyes for the next coming week will be focused on the big struggle in the Stadium Saturday between Harvard and Yale. Yale's showing against Princeton, a comeback true to Yale traditions, points to one of the hardest fought battles for the Crimson in the history of Harvard, and only the best the Cambridge eleven has, will suffice.

We have been insisting all season that the results down at New Haven adverse to Yale, did not matter an awful lot, and maintained that there would be a big comeback when the crucial tests came. One test has come and gone, and we are justified in our contention. Harken then, to our words of wisdom, we must admit they are thinking furiously) to the effect that while Harvard may still be a slight favorite, there is no good reason under the sun for any supporter of the Crimson to be overconfident or even supremely confident of the result of the game. It's going to be a battle to the finish, and we venture to say that as Yale improved between the days of the Brown game and the Princeton struggle, just so much, and probably more, will it improve between last Saturday and the end of this week.

GREEN NOW AN "ALSO RAN."

THE Blue has a tradition to uphold, to say nothing of its duty to protect the Bull Dog's sacred hide from murderous assaults of any and every kind, namely an unbroken line of victories for Harvard in the Stadium. Or possibly, to be more exact, Yale has never permitted the Crimson to win a game within the cement construction, and Harvard is particularly keen this year to add that feat to the job done at Princeton.

Last week there was a weird unearthly howl about Dartmouth and a championship of something or other. All that is left is a groan, and we can hardly see any grounds on which the Green can be considered in line for even honorable mention. We may say in the championship race that Dartmouth "also ran."

YALE GAME WILL DECIDE.

ABOUT the only eleven of any importance, and we must admit that we are assuming an arbitrary stand, but they all do it and we want to be in vogue, that has not been defeated or even tied this year is Harvard. The last game this week, then, will practically decide whether or not Harvard is to win the championship this year or not. If the Crimson is defeated by Yale, Heaven help the football experts in their frenzied attempts to decide the champions. Such a condition could only be satisfactorily settled by hair pulling and fisticuffs.

NEW TEAM NEEDS POLISHING.

WHILE Harvard's newly arranged eleven playing against Brown gave evidence of increased power and team work, it still seemed to be slightly disorderly at times, and a good deal of application of the smoothing iron and polishing wheels is needed during the remaining few days to get the team into first-class shape to compete favorably this week. Against Brown, Harvard was shy three regulars, Logan, O'Brien and Trumbull, and this may have had something to do with the defects apparent. The presence of Haughton at end, however, and Bradley playing a sterling defensive game in the backfield, have certainly added tremendous possibilities to the efficiency of the team and some startling plays are certain to result this Saturday.

MAHAN A "COMBINATION."

HARVARD is fortunate in having Mahan, an end runner of no mean ability and speed, a consistent punter and a man who can accurately hurl the ball on forward formation. Such a combination in one man adds greatly to the burden of the opposing eleven, for defence against each style of attack must needs be a little different. Therefore, realizing that either an end run, a forward pass or a kick may be executed when Mahan retires to the rear, the defence is naturally apt to be caught napping at any point, and adds to the strength of the Crimson attack.

With these possibilities very real, a mass of formations could be built around Mahan, and doubtless this will be done, and although Brickley is always the dangerous man on kicking goals, the offence of the Crimson team will be built around Mahan without in any way depending on him, so as to form a one-man eleven.

YALE GREATLY IMPROVED.

YALE'S eleven showed a remarkable improvement in offensive power and defensive play that doubtless made the critics sit up and take notice. In Guernsey, the Blue uncovered a drop kicker of no mean ability, and he will doubtless be used if the opportunity presents itself, to humble Harvard. Knowles, also one of the backs, is crowning his head with laurels for his excellent game, and again putting ourselves gently but firmly on our heads and backs—all this "we" is editorial license—the experts present at the Yale and Princeton game say that the Yale line is composed of better material individually than is the Crimson line, our contention at the start of the year.

SOMETHING MUST GIVE.

WITH two elevens pitted against each other both equally strong defensively, which experts claim is the case between Harvard and Yale, and two sets of backs, each equally strong on the offence, mathematicians will have an opportunity this coming Saturday to see for themselves the working out of the old puzzle in physics of what happens when an irresistible force meets an immovable body. Personally we don't believe such a thing ever did or can occur, and something is bound to give in the Stadium.

LANGFORD BATTLES "GUNBOAT"

"HO HO" RULES 2 TO 1 CHOICE OVER SMITH

By JACK CONWAY.

GUNBOAT SMITH and Sam Langford are ready for their twelve-round decision bout which will be staged at the Atlas A. A. this evening. It is the most important heavyweight contest since Jim Jeffries was bumbled by Jack Johnson that memorable Fourth of July in 1910.

Smith is the main heavyweight champion. He has conquered every "white hope" who has crossed his path. His mighty right-hand punch has stopped the majority of his opponents inside of the limit. The gunner is a young man twenty-four years of age, 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighing 183 pounds. He has all the qualifications for a great fighter.

Langford, on the other hand, is classed with the greatest of modern ring men. For years he has been considered the dream of the prize ring. He has defeated near champions, and has forced title holders to offer ridiculous excuses when he challenged them.

The "Tar Baby" is the logical opponent for Jack Johnson. The heavyweight champion, however, seems to be afraid to climb with the Cambridge terror. Johnson signed to meet Langford in Paris on December 27, but he recently stated that he would be unable to exchange glove with "Ho-Ho" at such an early date. It is obvious to those who have followed ring affairs that Johnson does not want any of Langford's game.

Dick Fleming of Newburyport was selected to referee the bout at a meeting of the promoters and managers of the rival boxers.

LANGFORD 2-TO-1 FAVORITE.

LANGFORD will enter the ring tonight a 2-to-1 favorite. The betting element believes that his experience and wonderful punching ability will enable him to down the nimble-limbed Californian. It is natural to make Sam a top-heavy choice in the betting, as he has fought such well-known performers as Jack Johnson, Joe Jeanette, Sam McVea, Sandy Ferguson, Jim Barry, Jim Flynn and Tony Ross.

Smith has been fighting for only a little over two years, but in this short time has made a good record. He has defeated almost all of the leading "white hopes." Included in his list of victims are Bombardier Wells, Frank Moran, Jess Willard, Jim Flynn, George Rodel and Tony Ross.

Smith gained fame by his terrific punching ability. He is only a fair boxer, but his punch usually enables him to win. The Tar experienced but little difficulty in knocking out the average white heavyweight, but was unable to make much of an impression on Carl Morris, Jess Willard and Frank Moran.

The "fans" who are betting on Smith are of the opinion that he may send Langford to the canvas with one of his right-hand smashes. Sam, of course, is a little over weight and is not as fast as he was two years ago.

LANGFORD SHOULD WIN.

THE writer believes that Langford will win even though he is not at his best fighting weight. He is very liable to knock out Smith in five or six rounds, but if he is unable to score a dream vailop he should win the decision. Of course there is a possibility that "Gunboat" may step Sam with a single punch. But that seems very improbable.

The tussle has aroused a great deal of interest throughout the United States. A big crowd of "fans" will pack the Arena to its greatest capacity.

If Langford wins he will start after Johnson, although he may clash with Joe Jeanette in Paris before he meets the Galveston man.

But if Smith should win he will be crowned world's heavyweight champion and will not be forced to fight Johnson. Sporting lovers the world over will admit that he is the best man in his class.

If Johnson were a popular champion Smith would, of course, be obliged to fight him before he would be recognized as the best of the heavyweights.

JOHNSON DEAD ISSUE.

JOHNSON, however, is barred in almost every boxing country in the world, and if the Gunner should conquer "Ho-Ho" the "fans" would probably insist that he ignore Johnson entirely, and permit the Galveston man to remain in pugilistic exile.

Langford has engaged in four bouts since he returned from Australia in August. He has knocked out "Porky" Flynn, John Lester Johnson and Jack Lester, while he fought ten rounds to a draw with Joe Jeanette. After his bout with Smith here Langford will go to Brooklyn to meet Bill Watkins—a third-rater.

ATLAS A. A. PROGRAM.

"Gunboat" Smith vs. Sam Langford, twelve rounds.
Freddy Duffy vs. Eddie Flynn eight rounds.
Walter Butler vs. A. Cunningham, six rounds.
Dave Powers vs. Tommy Dowd, six rounds.

SAM NEVER PRESSED.

LANGFORD has been training at Red Hill farm, North Reading, since he came East after defeating Jack Lester at Taft, Cal. Bob Armstrong, who prepared Jeffries, Fitzsimmons, Corbett and Sharkey for some of their big bouts, has had charge of Langford's training. He has been assisted by Pete Walker, the old Dartmouth trainer.

Langford has done considerable boxing with Jack Reid in order to get up speed. He realizes that Smith, although lacking in experience, is a fast, rugged youth, and is sure to carry him along at a merry pace.

Sam admits that he is a little hefty, but has not a great deal of respect for the present crop of white heavyweights. He says that if he has gone back, the white heavyweights must be very poor fighters, judging from the little opposition they have given him during the last two years.

There is no telling how hard Langford can fight, as he has not been forced to perform at his best for a number of years.

A good preliminary card has been arranged. Freddy Duffy of Jamaica Plain will clash with Eddie Flynn of Lynn in the semi-final bouts of eight rounds, and a spirited battle is expected.

There will also be two six-round bouts. Walter Butler will meet A. Cunningham, while Dave Powers will exchange blows with Tommy Dowd.

Sox Tie Giants in Games Won on Tour

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 17.—The Chicago Americans won two games from the New York Giants here, tieing the Giants in the number of games won by each team since the world tour began. The teams will play at Medford, Ore., today. Christy Mathewson and "Chief" Meyers of the Giants did not accompany the players further, their agreement with Manager McGraw having been to leave the club here.

Class AA Favors Round Robin Series

CHICAGO, Nov. 17.—The "round robin" series among the sixteen clubs of the American Association and the International League is practically assured, according to President Chivington of the former organization, who is just back from the minor league convention at Columbus. Mr. Chivington talked over the proposed tournament with the magnates of the eastern circuit who were at the meeting, and said that all the clubs except Rochester, which was not represented, had declared in favor of it. President Barrow of the International approved of the plan, and at the Winter meeting of his league will appoint a committee. It is expected, to confer with a committee from the association regarding details of the series.

White to Manage Coast Club in 1915

CHICAGO, Nov. 17.—"Doc" White, veteran pitcher, has reached an agreement with Manager Hogan of the Venice, Cal., Baseball Club, and his withdrawal from the Chicago American League Club is expected to be announced in a few days. White will join the Venice club as a player in 1914 and in 1915 will be made manager.

Everett-Waltham May Meet Nov. 29

Everett High and Waltham High, two of the four schools in line for the school football title of the State, may meet on the gridiron November 29. Everett has a game for that date with Lafayette (N. Y.) High, but it is possible that the New York school will consent to a later date, probably December 3.

LILL MAY BE NAMED LEADER OF THE A. A. U.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—During the progress of the A. A. U. preliminary meeting here, the question of the nominations for president of the organization was rather openly discussed. Quite a furore had been caused by the rumors that John Elliott of San Francisco would be named in opposition to Alfred J. Lill, Jr., of Boston, and George F. Pawling of Philadelphia. Up to date it was the consensus of opinion that the last named had the best chance to be successful candidate, but a canvass among the delegates revealed the fact that Lill was an almost unanimous choice, and that he would be installed without opposition. Lill's prospective tenancy of the highest place in the giving of the nation's delegates will mark the third gained by New England representatives since the union was organized in 1888, the former predecessors being Joseph B. MacCabe and Edward E. Babb, both of Boston.

Football Injuries Fatal.

CAMBRIDGE, O., Nov. 17.—John Lewis, aged twenty, is dead here from bridge High School, is dead here from injuries sustained in a football game played here November 8 between the Cambridge and Martins Ferry High School teams. Death was due to concussion of the brain.

The Seven Mistakes of Matrimony

—NO. 6—

By DOROTHY DIX

THE sixth deadly mistake of matrimony is:

NOT TO JUDICIOUSLY APPLY ABSENCE TO THE SORE SPOTS.

One of the remedies for matrimonial ills that is valuable both as a cure and a preventive is absence, but like other specifics, it must be used with discretion.

Undoubtedly the source of most domestic troubles is that the average couple who are married get overdoses of each other's society, and see so much of each other that they pall on each other's tastes. And this without reference to how good, or worthy, or charming they may be. It is a notorious fact that nobody has yet been able to achieve the feat of eating thirty quails in thirty consecutive days, and the human being has yet to be born who can look at the same face across the breakfast table, listen to the same opinion and hear the same complaints for 365 days a year without its getting on his or her nerves.

There comes a day when the person that we have thought beautiful, or handsome, looks hideous to us, when we feel that we will shriek if we have to listen to that old story again that we have heard millions of times already, and when we wonder why we didn't notice before we were married, and in time to save ourselves, those queer little irritating ways in which the party of the other part indulges.

BITTER REFLECTIONS

And we reflect bitterly and hopelessly how our once loved and admired wife or husband has degenerated, and wonder what on earth made us pick out that particular one.

Of course, nothing has happened. Our husbands and wives are just as good looking, just as intelligent, just as charming as they ever were, but we're just got too much of them. Our palate is cloyed with sweets, and we have temporarily lost our taste for chocolate cremas.

If we are wise we break away. If we are stupid we stay together, and scrap and fight, and make matrimony a dark and bloody battleground.

It is a pathetic fact that many a divorce might be saved by a two weeks' absence, yet every one knows that this is true from his or her own experience. Every married man knows that there are times when all that he sees in his wife is a fat woman, who is getting grizzled and middle-aged, and whom he suspects of henpecking him, and that he has moments in which he feels that is in pretty hard lines for a man to spend his days slaving to support a thing like Dot.

But let her go to her mother for a visit for a month, let her miss her children and daily ministrations to them, let him miss the steady flame of her unwavering loyal affection and cheerful companionship, and when she comes back, why, he thinks that she has gotten Lillian Russell beaten a city block in looks, and he stays awake half the night listening to her talk.

The same way with women. A woman gets into a frame of mind where everything that her husband does irritates her, and she weeps bitter tears over being tied to a callous brute who takes all of her work for nothing, and fails to appreciate her sacrifices, and she holds up all of her dearest friends and tells them the sad, and story of her life.

But let her go away from home and she isn't gone three days before she begins to recall her husband's good qualities, instead of his bad ones; and before a month rolls around she is singing his praises as the great matrimonial prize and patting herself on the back for having drawn it.

TOO BIG PITCHED

Pity the folly of those couples who say they have never been parted for a single day since they were married! Think of all the honeymoons they have missed, for a man and woman who really love each other do have a vision once more of the glory and the dazzling wings of romance every time they are parted and reunited.

No husband and wife should undertake to live together a whole twelve month without some break in it. It is more than our highly strung nerves can stand. We get tired of the same person as we do of a favorite dish and we need a change. And therefore many a married couple find that for some unknown reason the domestic atmosphere is becoming dark and murky; when the barometer of their own affections seems to have unaccountably fallen from fever heat to below normal; when conversation lags, and the mere sight of the way each other eats inspires almost murderous thoughts, why, then, nature has sounded its warning to them.

One or the other should go off on a trip, or on business, for the sake of preserving harmony in the family. Their love has reached its breaking point, and the only way to save it is to relax the tension and give it a rest. After which it will be as good as new, or even better. Sometimes we need distance to get a perspective on the good qualities of those with whom we live.

But while a little absence is a tonic for love, an overdose of it is fatal. People can be true to an ideal for years and years, but not to an individual, because the ideal is stationary and the individual is not.

A CONSTANT CHANGE

We change continually. We go up or down. We get bigger or smaller, narrower or broader, more or less, like our environment, and so the man and woman who are separated do not stay where they were when they parted, nor do they develop in the same direction, and when it happens each must come together again that they are not lovers. They are strangers.

There are no tragedies more bitter that that of husbands and wives who are parted for a number of years and who live on the hope of being reunited, but who, when they do meet, find that absence has done its deadly work and that they can nevermore be one again.

Therefore, in marriage, absence in moderation, for while it is true that a little absence makes the heart grow fonder, too much absence makes it grow fonder of the other fellow.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

LYSANDER JOHN APPLETON had been detained at home by sickness for a short time long enough to exhaust all the reading matter around a house that interests a man. And, believe me, that is not much.

He had read his papers through and through, and tried to read the Browning that lies carelessly around on the parlor table of every literary ambitious woman's home. Then, in desperation, he picked up his wife's favorite magazine, and bumped down into a comfortable position in his chair.

"Surely," he thought, "I will find something here to interest me."

The first picture showed two girls; one had her back partly turned and wore a grieved expression. The other was smiling, and whispering something in her ear. Both were so pretty Lysander John enjoyed a moment's anticipation of the love story he felt sure would follow.

This is what he read under the picture of the girl with a grieved expression: "A good tub dress. May be made at a cost of seventeen dollars if cotton voile is used."

Lysander John rubbed his eyes and stared. He thought it strange there should be such a story about such a pretty girl with a grieved expression. He didn't understand it. Perhaps there was a plot that he would learn more about later. So he read on. Under the picture of the whispering girl he read:

"Developed from cross bar material. Simulated silk skirt. Messaline band."

He felt disappointed, deluded, cheated. He had seen his wife and daughter read this magazine by the hour. Surely some of the stories in it had more action, more human interest. He didn't understand what the whispering girl had to do with a band. He didn't like the word "Developed" in front of the Messaline," he reflected, "Must be some Italian band."

With a sigh, he turned a page, and there saw a picture of a woman with four little children. One was throwing a ball into the air; another stood with both arms around a big grayhound's neck; another had both arms around the woman's neck, and the fourth she held in her lap.

Lysander John Appleton likes children. There have been times when he decided that some day he would be superintendent of a Sunday school. He felt that at last he had found something he could understand, and felt more settled comfortably in his chair. He read:

"The newest styles in inexpensive creations."

Then he lost all self-control, and threw the magazine at the floor.

What Color Suits You?

Read These Helpful Hints from Beautiful Alexandra Carlisle

By MAUDE MILLER

"BEAUTY is a gift from Heaven. It cannot be bargained for, and it is impossible to attain if it has not been bestowed upon you. And hence," says Miss Alexandra Carlisle, who is playing in "The Marriage Game," "why seek to attain the impossible? However, don't despair; you who have not beauty, for although you may not alter your features you may weave around yourself a beautiful frame. This but enhances the charm of the beautiful, and to the plain this is, indeed, a gift from Heaven.

"After you have done all that you can for yourself in the way of fresh air, plenty of sun and good plain food, after deep breathing has become a habit and you have banished superfluous fat with a few good exercises, such as swimming or the practice of its movements, you may begin to plan your frame. This must be chosen in keeping with your moods, and in case you have not already the secret of a beautiful frame I will tell you. It is color.

"Colors are young and old, and are, besides, very expressive. Everything lies in the feel of the color after you have selected it and have it on. Each color is expressive of some mood, and so it is important to select some color that can be depended upon—a color that will so express the combined different moods of which you are capable that you cannot possibly tire of it.

Miss Alexandra Carlisle.

WHITE THE YOUNGEST

"So that the color that you will probably choose for your mainstay will of necessity be of a neutral tint, and from that you can branch out into any of the queer but delicious shades that will bring out unexpected good points in your makeup.

"White is the youngest of all the colors, and is the most charming. Green is very young and very adaptable. You would be surprised at the wonders that can be wrought in the way of a green frame. Oftentimes peculiar emerald tints are discovered in otherwise impossible eyes which needed only the touch of color to be really beautiful.

"Yellow is very young, but is not easy to wear, and should, therefore, be chosen sparingly. It is wonderful for enhancing the beauty of the hair, but it needs a very clear skin to carry it off, and frequently makes the complexion muddy. Pink is youthful and very fresh. It is quite the most neutral of any of the pale shades, and is always resorted to after other colors have failed. It does much for the complexion, but more for the mind, for, as I said before, colors are moods, and pink brings it all the freshness of Springtime.

BLUE IS COLD

"Blue is cold, very cold, but is useful to the person with gray-blue eyes if worn near the face. Navy blue is the most neutral of all colors. It never enhances defects and makes the plainest person seem attractive.

"All the lovely rainbow shades that are worn today are simply variations of moods, and should always be worn as such. But if a girl is inclined to be plain I should advise her to stick to the pale tints or the neutral shades. Leave the flame color—the cerise and the terra cotta—for the face without a flaw.

"Of course, black is an old shade, but many is the oldest of all. It is, however, often the most lovely when used by those who have reached years of discretion. Youth must never affect it. Of all the shades in my color scheme of moods, gray is the loveliest. Gray can be neutral or it can express the most individuality. It can be stretched to embrace every mood or it may embody only one, but its own name is sympathy.

"Color is the secret of dress and should be treated as such. If more time and consideration were given to the choice of color and color combinations, each and every woman might have a beautiful and appropriate frame, and today this is almost as important as real beauty."

KNEW A LITTLE

A gentleman travelling some time ago asked a one-armed mendicant by whom he was accosted how he lost his arm.

"It was like this, sir. The last time I went to sea we was caught in a typhoon off Cape Orn. The ship went over on her beam ends, so the cap'n he orders me and Tom to go out on the main yard to reshunt the bobstit and ter splice the fly-boom to the mainmast. I was a-hangin' on to the top-gallant rat-lines, when Tom suddenly let go his end, and I was pitched forty feet in the 'old."

The gentleman smiled.

"That's a capital yarn," he said. "You ought to have been a sailor," and went on his way.

Crestfallen, the beggar watched his informant, and saw a cross sweeper tour-ish his best deferentially to him.

"I say, Jim, who's 'e w'en 'e's at 'ome?" he called.

"Him!" replied the sweeper. "Don't you know who that is? Why, that's Admiral Dewey."

Too Inquisitive.

When a local train pulled up at the Scottish junction where passengers change for Kurtlemuir, the porter put his head in the window of one of the compartments and asked:

"Any one here for Kurtlemuir?"

There was no response, and presently the train moved on.

Then an old Scotswoman remarked triumphantly:

"Am for Kurtlemuir, but I wouldn't tell that inquesseltive idiot so when he peered in!"

BUT the loud splash startled the three men. Not so did a cormorant of a white-headed sedan plunge to secure an unwary haddock.

The net attendants straightened their backs; the oarsmen stood up. The disturbance was so near, so unexpected, that it alarmed them. They looked aloft, thinking that a rock had fallen; they looked to the small eddy caused by Philip's disappearance to see if any sign would be given explanatory of an unusual occurance.

Were Philip thrown from such a height when in full possession of his senses, in all likelihood such breath as was in his lungs at the moment of his fall would have been expelled by the time he reached the water.

His mind must have resisted the rush of air, uttered involuntary cries, struggled wildly with his limbs.

But as it happened, Mason's rough handling in carrying him to the balcony made active the vital forces that were restoring him to consciousness.

He was on the very threshold of renewed life when he felt, and the downward flight helped rather than retarded the process. Indeed, the rush of air was grateful. He drank in the vigorous draught, and inflated his lungs readily. His sensations were those of a man immersed in a warm bath, and the shock of his concussion with the surface of the sea is nowise retarded the recuperative effect of the dive.

Of course he was fortunate, after falling from such a height, in striking the water with his right shoulder. No portion of the human body is so fitted to bear a heavy blow as the shoulders and upper part of the back. Had he dropped vertically on his head or his feet he might have sustained serious injury. As it was, after a tremendous dive, and a curve of many yards beneath the sea, he bobbed up inside the salmon net within a few feet of the boat.

Instantly the fishermen saw that it was a man, an absolutely naked man, who had thus dropped from the sky.

They were amazed, very frightened indeed, but they readily hauled at the dragging net and brought Philip nearer the boat. Even at this final stage of his adventure he incurred a terrible risk.

Unable to help himself in the least degree, and swallowing salt water rapidly now, he rolled away inertly as the net rose under the energetic efforts of his rescuers. There was great danger that he should drop back into the depths, and then he must sink like a stone.

Wearing their heavy sea boots, none of the fishermen, though each was an expert swimmer, dared to jump into the water. But the oarsman, being a person of resource, and reasoning rapidly that in the most enthusiastic salmon hauls to England would pursue him in such manner, grabbed a boathook and caught Philip beneath the arm.

He only used the slight force needed to support him until another could grasp him.

Then they lifted the half-drowned man on board, turned him on his face to permit the water to flow out of his lungs, and, instantly reversing him began to raise his elbows and press them against his side alternately.

Soon he breathed again, but he remained unconscious, and a restored circulation caused blood to flow freely from the back of his head.

Of course the men were veiling their surprise throughout this unparalleled experience.

"Who is he?"

"Where did he room free?"

"Nobbut a loony wad has jumped off yon crag."

"He's necked as when he was born."

At last one of them noticed his broken scalp. He pointed out the wound to his companions.

"That was never dean by fallin' t' water," he said.

They agreed. The thing was mysterious.

At last one of them noticed his stature, his delicate skin, the texture of his hands, the cleanliness of his teeth and nails, and spoke to the fisherman that something quite beyond the common run of seaside accidents had happened to the stranger. A man of much intelligence, hit on an explanation.

"He was swimmin' doon t' cliff after t' birds," he cried. "Mebbe forgy-graffin' 'em. I've heard of sike doin's."

"Man alive," cried one of his mates, "he wouldn't strip to t' skin for that job."

This was unanswerable. Not one gave a thought to the invisible Grange House. They held a hasty consultation. One man doffed his jersey for Philip's benefit, and then hastily covered him with oilskin coat and overalls.

THE FAMILY CUPBOARD

A Thrilling Story of High Society Life in New York, Adapted from Owen Davis's Dramatic Success

(Novelized by)

Katebury

(From Owen Davis' play now being presented in New York by William A. Brady. Copyright, 1903, by Authors' and News Service.)

"JIM considered this a moment for one J. Garrity to take the centre of the stage again. He started off on his reminiscence with deep relish—but neither Kitty nor Dick had attention for him. Kitty stood still tense with purpose. Dick strode nervously around the room. It is easy to dismiss careless speech with an apology—but the feeling that prompted it goes deeper than apology—it is not so quickly dismissed.

"Sure! Say! I remember one night before these blamed taxis ruined the city"—Jim stopped to shake his head over the "good old days"——"Well, one night in the days of kebs, I picked up a fellow and a girl in front of Shanley's —the old place, you know. This girl was pretty well loaded and"——

And the Finish Skeleton laughed again—laughed derisively.

Kitty sprang to her feet. Injured innocence was in her "Shame!" just then—and in every throb of her voice. This boy was coming out into the open here and now, she decided, like the queen bee.

"You're like all the rest. I thought I could trust you!"

There was almost a sob in her tone. The boy and the woman, stood with her great armchair between them. Her hand, looking very frail and tiny, rested on the back of the massive piece of furniture. Very gently, not to frighten her—not to "frighten Kitty Claire—with sudden passion, Kenneth felt that little hand in his.

"I want you to marry me," said Charles Nelson's son.

She looked at him a moment, then crossed over to the couch on the other side of the room and sat staring far into space. Kenneth followed a moment—back over two years before that month. Suddenly she began to laugh nervously, with a hysteria in her mirthful mirth. Kenneth went to her, and taking her hand sought still more gently—with deep reverence—seat by her side.

"What is it, dear?" asked the boy.

"Nothing," she replied, still staring into space and stirring a memory he could never guess and half fathom, the girl spoke:

"Only—it's funny. I didn't know it would be so funny."

"You know that I loved you?" asked the boy. "I didn't tell you that on the one thing for wanted—her love.

"Yes."

"You must have known I would ask you to marry me."

"Yes," she said. It was the only way. To poor little Kitty—to all the poor Kitties, sadly wise and wisely sad—there is always "the easiest way."

The girl spoke with dawning truth.

"I—I didn't like the—the——"

"But you will," said Ken, with the masterfulness of even the boy lovers.

"You you will marry me, Kitty?"

"Marry you!"

BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL NEWS EDITED BY EXPERTS

Latest in Today's Stock Markets

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stocks were still weak this afternoon, but the Boston list was relatively stronger than that in New York. Trading was torpid in all markets. Here in the afternoon Boston & Maine was a point higher because of reports that arrangements had been made to meet its financial obligations on December 1, including interest on the $17,000,000 6 per cent. notes due in June next, while New Haven was up ¼. Boston Elevated ¼ and United Fruit ½. American Telephone was down ⅝. U. S. Smelting had advanced ⅜. Granby ⅜ and Osceola ½, but most mines were lower, declines including Butte & Superior ⅜, Calumet & Arizona ½, North Butte ⅜, Isle Royale 1, Copper Range ⅜ and East Butte ⅜.

In New York Canadian Pacific was off 1¾. Southern Pacific ¾, Union Pacific ½, Reading ⅝, Lehigh Valley ⅜, American Can ⅝, Steel ¼, Amalgamated ⅜ and American Smelting ¼. The favorable character of Saturday's New York bank statement had no appreciable effect upon stocks. They were not in plentiful supply and soon after the opening, when it became apparent that they could not be forced out in quantity, bears were disposed to temporarily relax pressure.

Mexican Rumors Caused Decline.

The decline which marked the opening of stock markets was attributed to rumors from Mexico that indicated the situation had grown worse in that unhappy country. Sending down to sell Canadian and Canadian Pacific weakened there in sympathy while Mexican securities reflected the uneasiness. Of course a better Irish indemnity now New York at the start, although there was a rally when it was stated in Washington that President Wilson had not recalled Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy and knew nothing either of his being handed his passport or of Envoy Lind seeking a refuge on a battleship. It is understood that while the relations between the Huerta provisional government and the United States are critical that the climax has not been reached.

Slight Rally in New York.

At the end of the first hour prices in New York were above the opening level, but trading was stagnant. In fact it was very dull throughout the morning, share transactions not totalling much more than that did Saturday. Rallies while some issues recovered all or part of early declines, the range continuing below that at the close on Saturday. The market was weak over the midday period. All the leaders were lower, Canadian Pacific being off more than a point. The rise in New Haven was a feature, it selling as high as 78¾ in New York and 79 bid in Boston during the first hour. There was a limited supply of this issue, it was said. Central Leather was another specialty. London transactions in the great American market were light.

Copper issues were inclined to sag. There was no change in the metal situation, although foreign buying of German financiers are afraid of a gold movement to America out of London, something which would interfere with the Imperial Bank plans to increase still further its reserves.

Nothing of importance developed at Washington and the Supreme Court took a recess until December 1 without handing on decisions affecting the stock market.

Trading Quiet in Boston.

Trading was quiet at the start in the Boston market and the price range was narrow. The downward tendency of American Telephone here and elsewhere was due no doubt to continuation of the talk about government ownership. Statistics did nothing for the steels and the copper share prices. In fact the majority of them were lower by afternoon. New Haven was in more demand.

Financial News in Brief.

The London copper warrants market opened weak and at the morning call spot was off 5s and futures 10s. At the close spot was unchanged and futures 2s. 6d. still lower. Sales were 400 tons of spot and 2,100 tons of futures.

There is evidence that railroads will not do much structural work in 1914. They are expected to do as much as few rail and equipment orders as possible. This is one of the circumstances which make the ordinary investor fear the stock trade.

Buying of London remittances by Americans is on such a scale that in Berlin it is believed New York is accumulating large balances abroad from which to draw gold when needed.

German trade is not contracting in Germany as well as in this country.

Fortnightly London statistics show that European stocks of cotton, chiefly Hamburg, Rotterdam and Bremen, had decreased 1,589 tons on November 15 while copper supplies had increased 1,414 175 tons, making the net decrease 1,414 tons since the first of the month. Meanwhile the foreign supply is reported to be 24,413 tons against 25,827 on October 31.

The Fidelity Trust Company began business on May 15 last and in six months its deposits amounted to more than $1,000,000, on Saturday they totalled $1,115,278. This is a remarkable showing in a city with as many banking institutions as Boston.

There is a rumor in financial circles that a holding company is to be controlled by United Cigar Store interests will be formed to take over Riker and Hegeman and some other drug concerns.

Boston banks report that in the last week reserve excess increased $756,265 and excess with reserve agents $1,053,285.

Parcels post competition has not prevented the Adams Express Company from declaring a regular quarterly dividend of three per cent.

Scollay Square Olympia Opened

The new Scollay Square Olympia Theatre was formally opened to an invited audience which included Major Fitzgerald, Joseph A. Maynard, Senator Timility, Sophocles Whitney of the State Police and others.

The new theatre was designed by Clarence H. Blackall, and has some interesting modern features of arrangement and equipment. The organ cost some $50,000 and is the first of its kind in any theatre in the United States. The new house is on the site of the old Austin & Stone Museum, and cost about $2,000,000. Vaudeville will be the program offered.

Vanderbilt and Mackay Are Rivals

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The International horse show was marked by sharp rivalry between Clarence H. Mackay and Alfred Vanderbilt today. This cropped out during the judging of class 119 for fifties two years old. The first and second prizes were won by W. C. Freeman of Auburn, Pa., while the Vanderbilt horse Wood Nymph was placed in the Mackay entry. In the next class Mackay got his revenge, for "Lady Burns" carried off the blue. The Vanderbilt horse was third.

FACT AND COMMENT IN FINANCE AND BUSINESS

By S. C. FORBES, Business Editor.

How and where to find a job is the first serious problem that confronts most mortals in launching into the world.

* * *

To get a suitable start is of tremendous importance. Today the whole business of securing employment for youths is unorganized haphazard, chaotic. The difficulty of gaining the very first foothold is often deiscouraging alike to parents and youths.

* * *

Can anything be done to remedy this? Can means be provided for offering attractive opportunities to deserving lads forced to leave school at an early age to earn a living? Would not the introduction of some system for giving congenial jobs to our brightest boys in needy circumstances, jobs affording an inspiring field for progress, prove an invaluable incentive to youthful students and a blessing to employers?

* * *

This idea was propounded to me the other day by one of Boston's leading business men, William F. Fitzgerald, who has organized quite a multiplicity of financial and commercial affairs to squeeze all the milk of human kindness from his heart.

Here is the kernel of Mr. Fitzgerald's proposal:

The majority of boys have to leave school as soon as they finish their primary training. They must find work. They must contribute to the family purse.

If, instead of awarding money prizes, books, etc., to the pupils standing highest in each class, arrangements could be made to offer them—say the five best scholars in each school—competitive situations in both organizations both the boys and the business would be distinctly benefited.

The plan would stimulate study, would induce parents to take a more personal interest in the progress being made by their sons and would tend to increase business efficiency.

* * *

Mr. Fitzgerald assures me that large numbers of business men have given his suggestion the most cordial approval and have expressed their willingness to join any systematized movement along the lines indicated.

* * *

Cannot the plan be put in practice at least in a modest way with out great trouble or delay?

Certain New York manufacturers recently completed arrangements to provide supplementary education free of cost to numbers of their workers. Various financial, railroad and industrial concerns are also doing noble work in supplying appropriate education for their employees through day and evening classes. All this shows that the right spirit is already taking possession of enlightened employers.

* * *

But there is a gap between the outside of the school door and the inside of the business institution. To bridge this gap for the most worthy of those who have to get over it is the object aimed at by Mr. Fitzgerald.

* * *

Those of us who have undergone the stern experience of striving to bridge it unaided—and only such, I believe—can fully realize the value of the plan outlined. What an incentive to effort the prospect of honorable entrance into a business house of high standing! What a source of pride to poor people to have their son walk out of school to be welcomed by a humane employer who would see to it that their boy got a fair chance to start life! What an inspiration to get so promising a foothold on the lowest rung of the high step-ladder of success!

* * *

The rich man's son knows none of the misgivings which beset the poor boy who sets out without a friend, without chart or compass, to find work. Poor and wealthy parents realize the state of mind of people who have to send their offspring, at a painfully early age, out in quest of employment. Both the parents are unable to leave their own tasks to accompany the little searcher for work. What line of labor he takes up is a matter of supremest chance. It may be that he simply trudges along until he sees a "Boy Wanted" sign and applies instanter. His taste, his aptitude, his proclivities are matters entirely submerged—they are of no account.

* * *

The lad knows that he must, without delay, find a job and turn in all he can to help the family exchequer. That is the one controlling fact and factor.

* * *

Will not some of America's public minded citizens take up this proposal in their own localities and see if something can be done toward carrying it out? Little or no cost would be involved. The desire to do the thing is what is needed—tact and prudent co-operation between the school authorities and a few responsible men of affairs.

* * *

Will New York take the lead? Will Boston? Will Chicago? Will San Francisco? Will Los Angeles? It is a democratic, humane object, is it not?

* * *

It is a democratic, a humane object, is it not?

Electric Salon Opened Today At the Plaza

Display of Electric Motor Pleasure Vehicles Is a Striking One.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The most thorough exhibition of electric motor vehicles for pleasure purposes that has ever been witnessed in this country is that which was opened to the public this time at the opening of the Electric Motor Show, under the auspices of the Electric Motor Car Club of Boston, at the Copley Plaza, this morning. It was ten o'clock when the doors were thrown open and a goodly number of people in addition to those who are directly connected with the exhibition entered the splendid room and were afforded before them a scene of unexpected beauty.

The simplicity of the display itself was most impressive and, strange though it may seem at a motor show, there was no effort on the part of the attendants to impress anyone with the superiority of the vehicles. The attitude of all the exhibitors seemed to carry out the purpose of the exhibition, which is not primarily to sell cars but rather to bring forcibly to the attention of the people of Boston the beauties of the electric vehicle and its suitability on a large number of uses, particularly those for women in shopping, theatre or social calls.

All of the makers having branches or agencies in this city were represented by their latest models—there being practically the thirty cars in all. There was seen the elaborate limousines for opera use, elegant coupes equipped with every convenience, runabouts, coupes and runabouts were pleasingly displayed.

The opening exercises were brief and to the point. W. H. Hood, ex-president of the Electrical Vehicle Association of America, escorted by President Day Baker, was the first to enter the ballroom, and after a march around the hall, making a casual inspection of the display, he was escorted to the platform where he made a short and pointed address.

Mr. Hood reviewed briefly the work of the Electric Motor Car Club in its efforts to advance the interest in electric motor vehicles by organizing in the beginning of this exhibit it had attained the goal for which it had striven since its inception. He felt it was eminently proper that Boston, which has been foremost in the matter of motor vehicles of every description, should be daring enough at this time to hold a motor show or salon which could be considered exclusive to electric pleasure vehicles. He felt that the lessons that this salon would teach would be far-reaching and effective and would do much to advance the use of electrics not only in Boston and the surrounding territories but throughout the country. He paid a tribute to those men through whose loyal assistance it was possible to bring into being a show which three years ago was considered impossible. He felt that this was the first of many similar salons that would be held throughout the country and knew full well that during the next three days the salon would accomplish the purpose for which it was held—the spreading of the gospel of electric vehicles.

Lawson Ridicules Market 'Confidence'

Guarantees to Produce Panic with 60,000-Share Operation.

Thomas W. Lawson today sends a statement to the AMERICAN which reads in part as follows:

"A short time ago I gave buying orders for 30,000 shares. The press for three days dwelt upon the 'return of the public' and the 'tremendous desire to buy of big interests.' Friday of last week gave London orders for 15,000 shares. That market was taken as proof of foreign confidence in American securities.

"Isn't it ridiculous? Anyone who knows the ropes can make a ringing international bull market with stocks on five points on 50,000 shares. I will guarantee to produce a panic with stock sufficient for the purpose of attention. Stock gambling as of old has gone never to return."

TRUST COMPANIES AFFORD A BIG MEASURE OF PROTECTION TO WIDE VARIETY OF ASSETS

The Boston AMERICAN publishes today and will publish on successive Mondays articles on "The Trust Company and Its Activities." The articles will deal particularly with the relations of trust companies to the business communities, and will also give detailed information of value to investors. Every investor should read these articles, the sixth of which appears today.

Temporary Trusteeship

A Phase of Trust Company Service That Is Becoming More and More an Important Element in Business Life—A Chance to See the World

It is to the exceptional man, who has made that material success in life which gives substance to his wishes, that there has not come at times an almost uncontrollable desire to travel. Irving's word paintings of the Alhambra, the glories of Rome, the art and the literature of France, the scenic beauties of the Rhine, the magnificence of Cologne and Florence, the gay life along the Riviera, the historic places of Britain, the grandeur of Scotland, not to mention the wonders of the far orient and the riches of the Holy Land, have stirred his imagination and caught his fancy.

The better knowledge of China and Japan which comes with closer relations with those great empires, the pride he takes in our island possessions, acquired through the daring sortie of Dewey, all contribute to the desire to see the world: to know more of his fellowmen, differing in nationality, point of view and mode of life. Means he has in plenty, but time—that's the question and there's the rub.

He is independently well-to-do in the things men call wealth, but he is bound to his affairs, apparently as securely as the mythical Andromeda to the rock. He would gladly shift the collection of his rents, the care of his tenants, the control of his bonds and stocks, even over all the varying forms of his property to some capable agent, but his survey of the business situation as one in whose personality are combined all the elements which he exacts. That person he may be especially good to as collector, but he is too young or too inexperienced to be trusted with so great a responsibility as the routine management of the property the prospective traveler wishes to put aside for a time.

Elimination Process.

Another very capable man, on whom he has been relying so many years is beginning to show signs of physical breakdown. It would never do to place so great a burden on him. Other possibilities are also discarded one by one after careful consideration. By a process of elimination, inexorable in its exactions and scope, all idea of individual trusteeship is abandoned.

It is at this stage of his considerations of the possibilities of being able to get away for a year or two, that a new phase of the service which the modern trust company is performing with perfect satisfaction is brought to his attention. While he has been endeavoring to make desire fit duty and to reconcile wanderlust with opportunity, right at his very threshold is presented this agency which can solve his problems.

The trust company is not only willing to accept a temporary trust of this character but is capable of doing it in accordance with the very best of modern facilities and in addition can offer abundant proof of that capability and records to make such a trust perfectly safeguarded.

Take All Duties.

The trust company will buy and sell securities, or real estate, invest surplus funds, take complete charge of the absent man's property, renting it, keeping up repairs, paying taxes and insurance—in fact assuming all the details of a man's affairs, thus leaving him free to go abroad and assuring him of the very best financial and legal care of his business while he revels in the delights of travel.

No longer is it necessary for a man of wealth to journey to the Mediterranean or the Riviera or traverse the Nile in search of health. Many directors and officers are especially selected for their business ability and integrity, will transact the details of business for them, give letters of credit to every civilized landport, choose and drafts from every point, and upon demand restore to the owners the original property and every dollar derived from the income received during the absence, the trust company has been in practically complete possession of the estate. All this at a very moderate cost to the person who places the property in its care.

LARGEST NET PAID CIRCULATION IN NEW ENGLAND, DAILY AND SUNDAY

The Boston American's Policy for Civic and Industrial Progress In Boston

FIRST, a greater Boston Port.

SECOND, the extension of more railroads to Boston.

THIRD, the establishment of new steamship lines in connection with this port.

FOURTH, the encouragement of new business enterprises.

FIFTH, a systematic plan for the development of Metropolitan Boston, including the creation of an esplanade by the widening of Tremont and Boylston streets alongside the Common.

SIXTH, the improvement of the streets and transportation facilities.

SEVENTH, the promotion of education.

EIGHTH, sufficient and just laws regarding the manufacture and sale of foods.

NINTH, the establishment of permanent Grand Opera.

TENTH, the unremitting improvement of the AMERICAN, so that it may the better serve its constituents—the great reading public.

Boston Needs a Great Esplanade Where Tremont and Boylston Streets Border the Common—It Would Relieve Traffic Congestion for the Years to Come and Improve, Not Harm, That Historic Breathing Place

More than a decade ago the CONGESTION on Tremont street became so INTOLERABLE that the citizens rose up against it and undertook the construction of the Park Street Subway to relieve it.

Underground highways were NEW in America THEN and Boston was not THEN the most enterprising city nor were her citizens THEN likely to undertake a plan which seemed too venturesome for other more energetic cities.

That this was the FIRST SUBWAY in America shows how NECESSARY we regarded it to the welfare of the city to relieve the congestion on Tremont street.

The PURPOSE of the subway was to take off the street railway tracks from Tremont street. After the COMPLETION of the subway, the Boston Elevated attempted to restore the tracks. The usually complacent Legislature was willing, But Governor Wolcott insisted that the citizens of Boston should decide the question, and the citizens of Boston DID decide it. By an OVERWHELMING VOTE, more than two to one, they REFUSED to permit the relaying of tracks on Tremont street.

But the city has been GROWING, traffic has INCREASED and today, without the tracks, there is CONGESTION not only on Tremont street, but on Boylston as well. At times it is almost impossible to pass through either.

These two thoroughfares are so situated that they could easily be made into a MAGNIFICENT ESPLANADE, one of the great metropolitan malls which have become so attractive in the modern enterprising cities.

With NO expense and with NO violation to tradition and NO abridgment of the comfort or pleasure or rights of anybody, this sightly way can be made wide enough to take care of the traffic of the present and future.

There is a little used, broad walk on the Common side of both Tremont and Boylston streets which could be turned into a roadway, giving MORE ROOM for conveyances and permitting the broadening of the sidewalk on the side on which the traffic is the heaviest. Every blade of grass on the Common, by this plan, would be permitted to grow where it grew before. Not a bench or a tree or a bush would be removed and not a single comfort or pleasure of the precious, old Common would be abridged.

The Common is a GREAT OLD BOSTON INSTITUTION and the AMERICAN yields to none in its REVERENCE for this historic oasis of rest, light and air in the midst of our struggling mart. To beautify its border by making Tremont and Boylston streets a fine, great esplanade and giving both the light of day at night by splendid electrical displays, we should improve the Common and not harm it.

From the Side Lines

Christmas Is Coming! Begin to Shop Early

By DOROTHY DIX

DOST realize, beloved sisters, that the Christmastide is almost upon us, and the joyous season hath arrived wherein we must grapple once more again yet with the Christmas gift problem?

In former times Christmas didn't come but once a year, but now, with all the rest of modern improvements, it comes three or four times a year. Or at any rate it seems to; but that is beside the question. The main point is that it has rolled around again, and before you can say scat it will be Christmas again.

Hence I am writing these few lines to urge you to go and do your Christmas shopping right away. Don't put it off. Begin on it today, while the shops are comparatively empty, before the salesgirls are worn and harried until they are reduced to bundles of nerves and temper, and while you are still in command of your own sane senses.

Don't put off buying your Christmas gifts until the week before Christmas when you, and a million other women, will be afflicted with Dementia Christmasana, and go running around in circles in the department stores, beating your head up against the counters, and crying out, "What shall I get for my husband, and my son, and my daughter, and my mother, and my father, and my sister, and my brother, and my in-laws—drat 'em, they won't like what I give them, anyway—and for Uncle John, and Aunt Sally, and Cousin Sue, and the people across the street, who will send me something, and whom I've got to send something to?"

And you won't be able to remember a single fad or fancy, or taste, or inclination, or habit, or occupation of a single human being you know. And you'll go home and have nervous prostration, and give it to the clerks, and wish you had joined the Spugs and saved your money and your clothes and your time and the wear and tear on your disposition.

Now, I am one of those who believe in Christmas giving. It is a joy to the generous to give, and it is salutary for the stingy to be made to give up at least once a year. But the thing that makes Christmas a season of torment and woe and that leaves us feeling as if we had been run through a stone crusher is because we don't begin our preparations in time, and because we don't bring any common sense to bear on the proposition.

Wherefore I urge, entreat, implore, and otherwise request you to bear in mind your own comfort, and the good of that brave little army of working women, the salesgirls, and do your shopping early. It's a big sister who feels for the little sister behind the counter.

Then about the Christmas gift itself—

Unless you are making a present to some one who is very rich, the one best bet for an acceptable Christmas present is money. Don't be afraid of anybody being offended by a check, or even a few dimes. They won't, and every one of us could use a little money so handily, and get something we secretly pine for, and can't afford, if only you would send us a little money instead of the fool thing you do send.

Say, beloved, didn't you ever, on a Christmas morning, sit down among the junk that your kind friends and family have bestowed upon you, and figure out what it all cost, and wish that you had all of that money to put into something that you are crazy for, something that would do you some good, and that you would rejoice in as long as you lived?

There were silly gift books, with padded backs and fine pictures that cost $10 or $15, and that nobody ever looks at a second time; there were lamps that cost $15 or $20, when your home is flooded with electric lights; there were table centres that cost $5, and scarfs that cost $3 and $4, and imitation Japanese vases that cost $1 and $2, and so on—enough money thrown away in things that were absolutely useless to you to have bought something worth while, if only you could have pooled it all, and if people had thought it proper to have sent you seventy-five cents or a dollar and a half or whatever their gift cost.

As for children, always give money if you want to make the little folks doubly happy. For one thing, no grown-up in these days knows what a child wants, and in the second place the fun that children have out of going shopping with the money gives them ten times the excitement and pleasure that any gift could afford of itself.

I used to wear myself to a frazzle buying presents for children, but I don't do it any more. I send them the money and they invariably buy something that I wouldn't have thought of in a thousand years, and their mothers tell me that they look forward to my present more than to anything else they get.

But if you won't give money, for Heaven's sake give something practical and useful. In these days of the high cost of living practically everybody has to economize and do without things that they need and want.

So if you are thinking of giving a woman a present, don't waste your good money on idiotic jimcracks that will do nothing but clutter up the house and catch dust. Give her clothes. Give her furs, or blouses, or stockings, or shoes, or veils, or belts, or something that has got some sense and use to it. Nothing but the grace of God enables a woman who needs a pair of new slippers to look grateful for a hand-painted handkerchief case that some silly friend bestows on her at Christmas.

And if you are one of the women who make your own Christmas presents—and nothing else is a sweeter or a more gracious thing to do—don't throw away your time and your money constructing a what-do-you-call-it out of plush, and ribbon, and tinsel, and sachet powder combined with a tomato can. Use that same time and money making your friend a bit of hand-made lingerie—and she will arise and bless your name every time she puts it on.

Finally, beloved, remember this:

If you want a happy Christmas and to make others have a happy Christmas begin your preparations in time. Buy sensible things. And don't spend any more than you can afford.

Remember the first of January, when the bills come in!

A LOST LOVE

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

THE wine is spilled, drunk by the thirsty ground,
And gone forever from the lips that burned;
There is no more that can be newly urned;
No vintage half so rare is ever found.

The glass is broken into brittle bits,
Scattered upon the dusty banquet floor;
The empty bottle over near the door
Is cobweb-sealed where the gray spider flits.

The garlands are grotesquely dead and dry
As mummied tresses in an ancient tomb;
Like ghostly sheets they rustle in the gloom
When memory's searching zephyrs hurry by.

For it has been (as it shall ever be)
That glorious loves have perished at high noon;
That bounding pulses deaden with the swoon
Which hovered once above Gethsemane.

Maternal Duty—A Mother Should Sacrifice Cheerfully Her Ambitions to Her Children's Welfare

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company

I CRIED, "Dear Angel, lead me to the heights
And spur me to the top."
The Angel answered, "Stop
And set thy house in order; make it fair
For absent ones who may be speeding there.
Then we will talk of heights."

I put my house in order. "Now lead on!"
The Angel said, "Not yet;
Thy garden is beset
By thorns and tares; go weed it, so all those
Who come to gaze may find the unvexed rose;
Then we will journey on."

I weeded well my garden. "All is done."
The Angel shook his head.
"A beggar stands," he said,
"Outside thy gates; till thou hast given heed
And soothed his sorrow and supplied his need,
Say not that all is done."

The beggar left me singing. "Now at last—
At last the path is clear."
"Nay, there is one draws near
Who seeks, like thee, the different highway.
He lacks thy courage; cheer him through the day.
Then we will cry 'At last!'"

I helped my weaker brother. "Now, the heights;
Oh, guide me, Angel, guide!"
The Presence at my side,
With radiant face, said, "Look, where are we now?"
And lo, we stood upon the mountain's brow—
The heights, the shining heights!

A VERY lovely woman is the mother of two remarkably beautiful children.

They are ideally reared, and the elder has reached a baker's dozen of years.

The next is two years younger.

The mother has many ambitions and many gifts.

Having produced two rare children she felt her duty done as a parent, and she planned to devote her life to developing herself along mental and spiritual lines.

But now maternity again faces her, and for a little time this ambitious woman was rebellious at the thought of the time and strength and opportunity which she had conserved for her use in the world of endeavor being turned into the realm of motherhood again.

Better and tenderer thoughts and impulse, however, prevailed, and now the little traveler who is on the way from the World of Souls is anticipated with happiness.

We cannot always, or often, plan out the exact route in this life which we will tread in our search for development.

Higher agencies than we see or know have the matter in hand.

And it simply rests with us to turn these unexpected events into means of growth.

By doing the work given us to do to the very best of our ability, and by doing it cheerfully and saying little about it, and making as little noise or confusion over our toil as possible, we will develop in character, and that is the one purpose of existence, the one object and aim of the universe.

Franklin's Birth May Have Delayed Mother's Development

History does not tell us, but it is possible the mother of Benjamin Franklin felt that her own personal plans were upset and that her individual development was delayed when she found that her family of fifteen children was to be made sixteen.

But it is questionable if any work she could have achieved would have benefited the world to the extent it was benefited by the life of her son, Benjamin Franklin.

There was once a mother who sacrificed every personal ambition and all her desire for pleasure and travel and social enjoyment to her ambition for her children.

She wanted her daughters and sons to have all possible advantages, and as the family means were limited she gave up her own individual longings to enable her children to gratify their tastes.

But there was seldom a week passed in which this mother failed to tell her family of her sacrifices, and she thought so much about it that she developed the most morbid phase of self-pity, and enjoyed nothing so much as being regarded as a martyr to duty.

It would have been better for the family and for this woman had she carried out her own ambitions and aims and maintained a happy and cheerful disposition.

It would have resulted in better conditions for all concerned.

There Is No Benefit to Be Gained by Acting Ungracious

There is no benefit to be gained or bestowed by doing any duty in an ungracious, discontented, unamiable and despondent frame of mind. Unless you can bring yourself into a philosophical and patient mood, if not a cheerful one, in facing a duty, unless you can go about it with at least gentle resignation and a determination to accept the situation with good grace, and to get some benefit from the accomplishment of your task, it is better to let it go and flatly refuse, and to bear the punishment, when it comes, for your refusal, for come it will.

Destiny has strange ways of educating our souls.

Few people have ever followed the exact paths they have laid out for themselves in seeking The Heights.

But all paths lead to those heights if we take the right viewpoint, and if we do well whatever duty or obligation is placed before us.

Only when done cheerfully is duty really well done.

THE HIGH ROAD

By LILIAN LAUFERTY

FOR me no quiet by-path, no peaceful little lane,
No wandering and shy path unscourged by wind and rain;
No garden spot far hidden from paths that men must tread,
Where strife is all unbidden and energy is dead.

I choose the wilder high road for all its glaring dust,
That path shall still be my road where I shall walk and trust,
Through struggle and through sorrow I still may do and dare
And earn each new tomorrow with hands that toil and care.

Perhaps the world will call me a loser in the strife,
But tho' man's scorn befall me I still must live my life
In loyalty unswerving to standards and to friends
So Heaven I'll be deserving when Life's great high road ends.

FROM THE HILLS

By CONSTANCE CLARKE

A TANG of sharpness in the quickening life
Of sluggish air waves shivering tree on tree,
The limpid blue where fronded branches drift
Their green across the sky and then—the sea.

Out of the calm and silence of the hills
The pine-locked secrets of their mystery
Unto the wider calm that never stills
Unto the wilder mystery of the sea.
